PREFACE.

"THE Rule of the Law of Fixtures," is an attempt to gather up in one manageable formula all the numerous factors or elements requiring to be considered in advising upon modern cases; it also attempts to arrange these factors, or elements, in the order of their relative importance. The difficulty which I felt, or have felt, personally, in giving my opinion upon the questions regarding Fixtures which have been submitted to me, has been the occasion of my writing this work, the cardinal defect of the existing treatises upon the subject appearing to me to be their neglect to point out with sufficient, or any, clearness, the measure of that relative importance; and my rule, therefore, if it should be found to possess any substantial value, other than, or beyond, the personal value which it has, and must have, to myself, will be found valuable principally in this respect—that it subordinates in the statement what is subordinate in the reality. I have been comforted to find a corroboration, or justification, of my mode of handling the subject, in the recent judgment of the Lord Chief Baron Kelly, in the case of Climie v. Wood, cited, and in part set forth, on pages 45-6 of this work; but I adopted my historical method at a time when I was unaware of that decision, and from a pure desire to substitute for my own personal authority, and for the ingenuity of the present, the laboured wisdom and the impersonal authority of the past.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

ADDENDA.

P. 11, line 5 from bottom, after "Lawton v. Salmon (1 H. Bl., 259 n.)," add, "decided in 22 Geo. III."

P. 13, line 10 from top, after "Fisher v. Dixon (12 Cl. and Fin., 312)," add, "decided in 1845."

P. 14, line 11 from bottom, after "(quoted supra)," add, "decided by Comyns (C.B.), prior to 1743."

P. 15, line 13 from bottom, after "21 Hen. VII.," add, "7 Year Book, 264."

P. 25, between the paragraph ending "set forth," and the paragraph beginning "From the two cases," insert the following paragraph: –

With regard, however, to this apparent compromise in the law of distress, it has been represented to me by a solicitor of experience in the matter, that the prevalent tendency at the present day is to extend the landlord's right of distress to all fixtures of whatever sort which are removable by the tenant during his tenancy, or which are leviable upon an execution issued against him, it being considered only right to put the landlord upon at least a level in this respect with the execution creditor, and so to secure him again in his old and most just rights as against the latter. This apparent return to the old law is, in reality, an inversion of that law, all fixtures of the modern sort being (or at least threatening shortly to become) distrainable and leviable without distinction, and the more active or diligent of the two disparate claimants being left to have the better of the other.

P. 34, between the paragraph ending "operation" and the paragraph beginning "It remains," insert the following paragraph :—

It may be well to quote here in this relation, the further case of Birch v. Dawson (2 A. and E., 37), decided in 1834, where, under a bequest to A of a certain leasehold messuage, "with the grates, stones, coppers, locks, bolts, keys, bells, and other fixtures and fixed furniture therein," upon trust, to permit B to have the use and enjoyment thereof during her life; and under a further bequest also to A of "the household goods, furniture, plate, linen, books, china, wines, and liquors," in the same messuage at the time of the testator's decease, in trust for B absolutely; it was held that a certain looking-glass, standing on the chimney-piece, and fastened by nails on each side to the wall, and a certain bookcase, standing upon brackets, and fastened by a screw at the top to the wall, were included under the term fixed furniture used in the will, even although they were not ejusdem generis with the grates, stoves, and other the articles mentioned in the prior enumeration, the judges of the King's Bench having been of opinion that the testator had intended to distinguish between fixtures on the one hand, and fixed furniture on the other, and also between furniture that was not fixed, and furniture that was, so that the fixation of the looking-glass, and of the bookcase, although of the very slightest character, was sufficient to take these articles out of the category of furniture simply, and to place them in the category of fixed furniture; and no question of fixtures, properly so called, was stated to arise in the case.

P. 42, between paragraph ending "arose," and paragraph beginning "Again," insert following paragraph :—

So also in the case of Trappes v. Harter (3 Tyrwh, 603), decided in 1833, where X was owner in fee of certain premises, and X, Y, and Z (who were co-partners in trade), put up certain machinery and utensils on the premises for the purposes of their trade (which was that of calico-printers), and where X and Y afterwards became seised in fee of the premises under a conveyance which made no express mention of the machinery or of the utensils, and mortgaged the said premises,

"and also the steam-engine, mill-gearing, &c., &c., and other matters and things standing, or being in or upon the said premises, which in any manner constituted fixtures and appendages to the freehold thereof," to A the plaintiff, for a term of years, and X, Y, and Z afterwards, while still remaining in possession, and carrying on their trade as usual, became bankrupt, and their assignees in bankruptcy sold, or claimed to sell, all or the greater part of the machinery and utensils in the possession of the bankrupts at the time of their bankruptcy, it was held, that the mortgage to A was intended to pass, and passed to A, only that part of the machinery which, from the circumstances of its erection, or otherwise, necessarily became part of the freehold, and that all that other part of the machinery (with the utensils), which was customarily removed in the trade, and which was also readily removable without injury to the freehold, was personal estate in the apparent ownership of the bankrupts at the time of their bankruptcy, and passed as such to the assignees, the defendants.

CORRIGENDA.

P. 16, line 16 from top, for "53," read "153."
P. 16, line 5 from bottom, for "fixtures," read "fixed."
P. 18, line 3 of paragraph 2nd, for "Ferrard," read "Ferard."

IT has been said of history that it finds its entablature in law; it may conversely be said of law that it finds its explanation in history. Hence arises the necessity for lawyers in interpreting the laws of any period to regard them in the light of the contemporary history; for so only are we able to intelligently judge of their consistency or inconsistency with the laws of the preceding and succeeding periods. The law of fixtures, the subject of this article, is more especially obnoxious to this necessity or rule, inasmuch as from its primary relation to the freehold of land, it has had to undergo, and has undergone, corresponding variations with each successive variation of its principal or relative. And just as those latter variations have been mainly occasioned by considerations of modern equity breaking in upon the rigour of the olden law, so also have the former variations been for the most part occasioned by like equitable reasons. The very name of "fixtures" affords in itself in the ambiguity, or rather the inversion, of its meaning, a perpetual memorial of the extent of the effects of this equitable interference; for while it doubtless originally connoted that sort of positive fixation and positive annexation which the etymology of it suggests, yet it now connotes the altogether negative and opposite conception of "the right to unfix or to remove" (See Hallen v. Runder infra). Moreover the infrequency in early times, and the frequency in these and in more recent days of disputes regarding fixtures, afford a further evidence or proof of the extent of these modern modifications of the law; as does also the scantiness, or rather the almost total want of allusion to fixtures in the early records and memorials of our law.

This scantiness of allusion is, indeed, at first sight remarkable. Thus, the word fixtures does not so much as once occur either in the abridgment of Bacon or in that of Viner as a substantive head of law; nor is it mentioned among the "Termes de la Ley." It occurs, indeed, in Comyn's Digest, but in the addenda only, and not in the principal body of that work. In the Year Books it is as infrequent, nor do the smaller compendiums, digests, and abridgments of our early law present the name in any greater prominence or frequency. It is true, indeed, that the substance of the law of fixtures is found in all those early records, but then the materials of it there given are not only scanty in their amount, but are also stowed away among the subordinate divisions of other and seemingly unconnected heads of law. Thus, in the abridgment of Bacon, we find the following somewhat obscure allusion to them under the head of "Executors and Administrators":—

"(H) What shall be deemed the testator's personal estate or assets in the hands of the executor; and herein—(1.) . . . . (2.) . . . . (3.) What shall be deemed his personal estate; and therein what things shall go to the heir, and not to the executor."

And again we find numerous matters entered under the head of "Waste or Wast," which, we at first sight imagine, might as correctly have been entered under the head of "Fixtures;" and yet they nowhere appear under this latter head. The precise relation indeed of fixtures to waste in early and in more recent times is an interesting subject to investigate, and is a matter not altogether easy to define. It appears, however, speaking generally, that the law of waste, as being the earlier law, included within it in early times the law of fixtures, regarded at least from the landlord's point of view; and this aspect of the law of fixtures having been originally the only aspect of it, it would follow that the law of fixtures and the law of waste were originally identical. But the law of fixtures in its predominant modern aspect is the law of the tenant more than of the landlord, and as such it is unknown to the early law, and is therefore specifically a different law from that of waste.

The comparatively late origin of the law of fixtures in the modern conception of it seems, however, to admit of explanation. If we call to mind the peculiarity of the relation subsisting in old times between the lessor and his lessee—a relation in which status was everything, and in which contract had neither place nor part; where the tenant had no civil existence independently of, or as against his lord, but was (so far as regarded his tenancy at least) the mere bailiff or agent of his lord; we shall readily understand, I think, that in such a relation the maxim of accessio cedit principali found unobstructed operation. From this maxim, which in its special application to land assumed in the civil law the form of "Solo cedit, quod solo inaedificatur," and in our own law the form of "Quidquid plantatur solo, solo cedit," it followed in virtue of the relation aforesaid subsisting between landlord and tenant, that everything of whatever sort put up upon or put into the soil by the tenant straightway became part and parcel of the soil, and the tenant had no right, even during his term, to remove or to unfix it again. It was, in fact, the landlord's fixture from the first, and the tenant had neither any property in it, nor any right to, or power over, it in this the earliest phasis of the agricultural relation. So long, therefore, as this phasis of that relation continued, there was neither occasion nor opportunity for the question of fixtures to spring up as between landlord and tenant. It was only and could only be from the time that the tenant acquired a certain personal freedom or individual independence that the question in this aspect of it could arise; for fixtures as we have seen is a word which peculiarly regards the tenant as waste does the lord. And although it is true that a man who was the villein of one lord might be the tenant of some other person to whom he stood in no relation of villenage, still as he occupied a position which was customarily assigned to the villein, although his personal rights were unabated, his rights in respect of his tenancy doubtless suffered depression from the analogy of the villein's condition; and beyond all doubt those latter rights were most difficult if they were not impossible to assert, for where was the law which recognised them, or the legal machinery which enforced and supported them?

Now it is matter of history that this primitive relation subsisted in all its unmitigated rudeness for a period that was sufficient to allow the full development and solidification of the law of agricultural fixtures purely and simply so called, that is to say, of erections and other things which were indispensable to the bare or necessary enjoyment or culture of the land as such. The primitive rigour of this branch of the law of fixtures admits therefore of the simplest explanation; and the continuance of that rigour down to the present times admits of as ready a one. Its continuance is in fact a result of the operation of that maxim of our law which is expressed by the phrase "Æquitas sequitur legem," whereby equity is rendered powerless to check the operation or to remedy the effects of a law which has been once definitely and clearly formed, and declared. But indeed the villein or anti-villanus had little (if he had any) equitable ground of complaint: "Nam scienti alienum esse solum, potest culpa objici, quod temerè aedificaverit in eo solo, quod intelligeret alienum esse" (Inst. II., 1., 30).

It appears to have been in the reign of Edward I. that the villein or pro-villein class first rose to importance, and accordingly we find, in the reign of Edward II., his immediate successor, the first trace of a contention between a landlord and his tenant, respecting the claim of the latter to take down certain agricultural erections put up by himself upon his farm. Thus we read in the Year Book (I., 518), that in the 17 Edward II., a person who was the lessee of land built a house upon the land, and afterwards pulled it down, and was adjudged guilty of waste for so doing. Lord Coke, in apparent reference to this case, remarks (Co. Litt., 53*a*), that there was waste in the building of the house, and also new or further waste in afterwards suffering it to waste. This decision, which is the first of the reported decisions upon the matter, probably checked for a time the enterprise of the villein improver; but that enterprise soon discovered other contrivances whereby to elude or to defeat the landlord's right. These contrivances we shall consider hereafter, for the present we must follow up the effect of the decision itself. It appears, then, that the decision was thoroughly effective, and even final, upon the particular state of matters in respect of which it was pronounced, for although we do indeed find a considerable number of cases, both early and recent (being the cases hereinafter in that relation mentioned), upon matters more or less resembling this particular state of matters, yet we do not find any other instance of a dispute regarding the identical state of matters, until so recent a date as the beginning of the present century, when the same question was again raised, and apparently in a wilful or intentional manner, in the great case of Elwes v. Mawe (3 East, 38), decided by Lord Ellenborough in 1803. The inducement for bringing this case forward at all at the time appears, as well from the arguments of counsel as from the judgment delivered in it, to have been the hope of being able, upon the strength of the (as we shall see) admitted liberality of the law of fixtures in matters other than the strictly agricultural, to extend the like liberality to the strictly agricultural fixtures also, and thereby to dissipate and to dispel by one decision, conceived in the modern spirit, the rigour of a law which had descended without mitigation from the olden times. But the endeavour failed of its object, and the old rigour of the law of agricultural fixtures—where those fixtures were buildings let into the ground—survived then, as it still survives, the noble and learned judge having decided, after an examination of all the cases, that "no adjudged case had yet gone the length of establishing that buildings subservient to the purposes of agriculture, as distinguished from those of trade, were removable by the tenant himself who built them during his term."

The cases to which we alluded on a previous page as having arisen upon matters more or less resembling the state of matters exemplified in the 17 Edward II., and in Elwes v. Mawe, are chiefly the following:—In the 24 Eliz. in Cooke's case (Moore, 177), one Cooke brought an action of waste against one Humphrey, and for waste assigned (inter alia) the distraint of two doors with their cheek posts. Humphrey pleaded the erection of the said doors and posts by himself after the commencement of his tenancy, and their removal at the expiration of it, and upon demurrer the justices held that Humphrey's defence was no plea, Mr. Justice Pirryam stating as follows: "When the lessee takes glass windows or doors which were already in the house at the time of the granting of the lease, such taking is waste; moreover, if the lessee annexes anything to the frank tenement and afterwards takes it, such taking also is waste. Now some doors are a defence to the frank tenement as outer doors, while others are less in the nature of necessities, for example, the inner doors which separate the apartments within the house. It seems, therefore, that a lessee who erects the posts for outer doors, and slings the doors upon them, cannot afterwards remove the doors during his term; but it is otherwise with inner doors." Again, in the 41 Eliz., in the case of Warner v. Fleetwood, quoted by Lord Coke at the conclusion of his report of Herlakenden's case (4 Rep., 64*a*), it was resolved per totam curiam that glass annexed to windows by nails, or in other manner, by the lessor or by the lessee, could not be removed by the lessee, for without glass it was no perfect house; and by lease or grant of the house it should pass as parcel thereof, and that the heir should have it, and not the executors; and it was likewise then resolved that wainscot, were it annexed to the house by the lessor or by the lessee, was parcel of the house; and that there was no difference in law "if it be fastened by great nails or by little nails, or by screws, or by irons put through the post or walls (as have been invented of late time), but if the wainscot is by any of the said ways, or by any other way, fastened to the posts or walls of the house, the lessee cannot remove it, but he is punishable in an action of waste, for it is parcel of the house; and so by the lease or grant of the house (in the same manner as the ceiling or plaistering of the house), it shall pass as parcel of it."

There is also a case of Darcey v. Askwith (15 Jac. I.), reported by Hobart (234), which is more important for the dicta which it contains than for the decision which was given in it. The principal of those dicta may be said to be the following:—

"It is generally true that the lessee hath no power to alter the nature of the thing demised; he cannot turn meadow into arable, nor stub a wood to make it pasture. . . . A lessee may build a house where none was before, but that must be every way at his own charge. . . . And if he keep it not in repair, an action of waste lies."

Such having been the rigour of the early law, and that rigour having survived, as we have seen, to the present day in respect of all those strictly agricultural erections, and the necessary completions thereof, which would have fallen in old times, and which do, therefore, now also fall within the scope of the old law, the tenant's only safety, in putting up strictly agricultural buildings that are to be actually let into the soil, or any of the necessary completions thereof, is one or other of the two following courses; namely, either (1.) To enter into such stipulations, or into such an agreement, with his landlord at the commencement of his tenancy regarding the cost of the erections, or regarding the subsequent continuance of his tenancy or otherwise, as his own practical wisdom may suggest; and failing such stipulations or such an agreement, then, (2.) To obtain from the landlord some indication or expression of his consent to the buildings being erected. In the one case he will secure to himself a remedy upon the special stipulations or agreement; in the other case he will be able to proceed under the Statute of 14 & 15 Vict. c. 25, which, in its third section, enacts as follows:—

"That if any tenant of a farm or lands shall, after the passing of this Act, with the consent in writing of the landlord for the time being, at his own cost and expense, erect any farm building, either detached or otherwise, or put up any building, engine, or machinery, either for agricultural purposes, or for the purposes of trade and agriculture (which shall not have been erected or put up in pursuance of some obligation in that behalf), then all such buildings, engines, and machinery shall be the property of the tenant, and shall be removable by him, notwithstanding the same may consist of separate buildings, or that the same, or any part thereof, may be built in, or permanently fixed to, the soil, so as the tenant making any such removal do not in anywise injure the land or buildings belonging to the landlord, or otherwise do put the same in like plight and condition, or as good plight and condition as the same were in before the erection of anything so removed; provided, nevertheless, that no tenant shall, under the provision last aforesaid, be entitled to remove any such matter or thing as aforesaid, without first giving to the landlord or his agent one month's previous notice in writing of his intention so to do; and thereupon it shall be lawful for the landlord, or his agent on his authority, to elect to purchase the matters and things so proposed to be removed, or any of them, and the right to remove the same shall thereby cease, and the same shall belong to the landlord; and the value thereof shall be ascertained and determined by two referees, one to be chosen by each party, or by an umpire to be named by such referees, and shall be paid or allowed in account by the landlord, who shall have so elected to purchase the same."

But besides buildings fixed into the soil, it is evident that other buildings might be erected which should either rest upon without being fixed into the soil, or which should not even rest upon the soil but upon some substructure in the soil expressly prepared to receive them; and it was in resorting to this latter species of erections that the villein enterprise or sagacity, to which we have alluded, principally displayed itself. The case of Culling v. Tuffnall (Bul. N. P., 34) is a good illustration of this latter class of agricultural buildings. It was the case of a barn raised upon "patens and blocks of timber lying upon the ground, but not fixed in or to the ground." Treby (L. C. J.), who tried the case at Hereford in 1694, declared the barn to be removable by the tenant who had erected it. The ground of his lordship's opinion is stated in the report to have been a custom in that part of the country of erecting barns in the manner described, with a view to carrying them away again at the end of the term. Mr. Justice Buller however remarks of this case, that although the Lord Chief Justice thought proper to rest it upon the custom of the country, he (Mr. Justice Buller) apprehended that it would now be determined in favour of the tenant without any difficulty; "for of late years," he says, "many things are allowed to be removable by tenants which would not have been permitted formerly." And Lord Ellenborough remarks of this case in the leading case of Elwes v. Mawe before cited—"To be sure the tenant might (take them away at the end of his term), and that without any custom; for the terms of the statement exclude them from being considered fixtures: 'They were not fixed in or to the ground.'" It appears to us, if we may hazard an opinion in the case, that Mr. Justice Buller's explanation is preferable to that of Lord Ellenborough; for we think that the latter explanation would not alone have been sufficient to account for the original removability. For it has appeared in the previous part of this article, that the law of agricultural erections, being those erections which were (as indeed all the original agricultural erections were) barely necessary to the enjoyment of the land, or to the performance of the ordinary farm routine, was of a grasp sufficiently rigorous and comprehensive to embrace in the earliest times even such agricultural erections as the barn in question, which were either not fixed in the ground at all or were but slightly fixed in it. And it wanted therefore the growth and counteracting influence of a contrary custom to relax the illiberality of the rule; it is however true that, by the year 1803, and indeed long before it, that silent pertinacity, which is the soul of liberty, had established a universal custom of removing fixtures even although strictly agricultural which were constructed in the manner of the barn; and the fault of Lord Ellenborough's criticism upon the case is not that it is erroneous in the substance, but that it is unlearned in the reason, of it. There does not appear, with the one remarkable exception of Wansboro' v. Maton, hereinafter set forth, to have been any other decision upon a state of matters which was in all respects like to the state of matters presented in the Barn case of Culling v. Tuffnall; and it may be assumed therefore that that case also settled the law in this particular respect upon its definitive and final basis.

We shall find, indeed, in the second or following division of our subject numerous resembling cases of like erections, which were held to be removable by the tenant who had erected them; but we shall there also find that the ground upon which this removability was declared was something entirely unconnected with agriculture. And we may therefore regard this first division of our subject, the purely agricultural part of it, as completed.

Before leaving it, however, it is desirable to extract from it the principle which it is so well calculated to give, and which must be our guiding principle throughout all the rest of this investigation. We have seen how it was that by the most natural of all processes the early agricultural erections instantly and invariably became part and parcel of the soil upon which or in which they were set up. This ready union of the fixtures with the soil may be resembled to the union or commixture of two objects which have a chemical affinity for each other; it was something altogether different at least from that merely mechanical union which is created or produced by the juxtaposition of two non-resembling bodies. Now it is extremely important to attend to the nature of this quasi-chemical union between the soil and the fixtures. For if it be possible to find a like quasi-chemical affinity to exist between any other res principalis and its particular fixture or appendage, then it would only be consistent in such a case to hold that there also a quasi-chemical union either has arisen or ought to arise between the two objects, in the absence at least of any countervailing equitable considerations. It becomes therefore in all cases a preliminary, and indeed indispensable, step in determining whether and by whom a particular fixture is removable, to first ascertain the proper or distinctive character of the res principalis itself. Thus the inheritance in general consists of land purely and simply so called, and the fixtures which would in such a case present an inherent affinity to it would be those only which are strictly agricultural. Sometimes, however, and more frequently perhaps than not in these modern days, the inheritance consists of land plus some particular character of as permanent a nature as the land itself.

Now, in this latter case, the particular fixtures which would have an affinity for the inheritance would be those objects or things which were themselves also in some essential manner possessed of that character, in other words, which were peculiarly or directly subservient to the enjoyment of the land in that its seemingly adventitious yet permanently acquired and natural character. The principle for which we are at present contending finds its illustration and expression in the Salt Pans case of Lawton v. Salmon (1 H. Bl., 259 n). In that case the inheritance consisted of Salt-works, and the fixtures which were the subject of dispute were the salt pans used in the works, two things between which there was an evident correspondence and affinity, or similarity of mutual adaptation.

The case presented no circumstances of peculiarity giving rise to any equity as between the parties, so that the simple and unbiassed question to determine was this, whether the quality of the inheritance should or should not determine the quality of the fixtures also, that is to say, should determine whether these fixtures were irremovable, as forming part and parcel of the inheritance; for it was admitted that the salt-pans were, as a matter of fact, removable, and that too without damage either to themselves in the removal or to the building in which they were placed. Lord Mansfield, the judge who determined the case, recognised the importance of our principle of regarding the quality of the inheritance as the primary consideration in determining the quality of the fixtures, and after briefly stating the then law of fixtures in the ordinary applications of it, said as follows:—

"The present case is very strong. The salt-spring is a valuable inheritance, but no profit arises from it unless there is a salt-work, which consists of a building, &c., for the purpose of containing the pans, &c., which are fixed to the ground. The inheritance cannot be enjoyed without them. They are accessories necessary to the enjoyment and use of the principal. The owner erected them for the benefit of the inheritance; he could never mean to give them to the executor, and put him to the expense of taking them away, without any advantage to him, who could only have the old materials. On the reason of the thing therefore, and the intention of the testator, they must go to the heir."

The reader will, doubtless, have observed from the quotation given above, that Lord Mansfield regarded the spring or the ground out of which it issued as being in itself the inheritance, and that he included the salt pans and the salt-works in the same catalogue of accessories to the principal thing or the inheritance; it might, however, be submitted, that at the time of the erection of the salt pans the salt-works were already part of the inheritance (see Report of case), and that the pans therefore went with the works plus the spring, and not that the works plus the pans went with the spring; although indeed if Lord Mansfield's view is to hold even in this particular matter—a matter upon which his lordship would probably not have insisted, then our view of the case is strengthened all the more, as the salt pans would in such case be in a double degree the accessory of the res principalis.

This principle of ours was also afterwards recognised and proceeded upon by Lord Brougham in his elaborate judgment in the case of Fisher v. Dixon (12 Cl. & Fin., 312), where, after expressing his disapproval of the Cider Mill case (cited in Lawton v. Lawton, 3 Atk., 13), or rather the want of sufficient data to judge of the correctness of the decision which was given in it, he continued, with some slight inaccuracies, as follows:—

"If a cider mill be fixed to the soil, though it is a manufactory and erected for the purpose of a manufactory, yet if it is really solo infixum, it is perfectly immaterial whether it be for the purpose of a manufactory, or of a granary, or of a barn, or of anything else. It is a fixture on the soil, and it becomes part of the soil. Can any man say, that one of the great brew-houses would belong to the executor, because it is erected for the purpose of a manufacture which is wholly unconnected with the land? . . . It has nothing to do with the land, as may be seen by those who will take the trouble of looking at any of the brew-houses in London, which are established in places where it would be very difficult to find a blade of grass, much less a crop of barley, of which to make malt. But although it is a manufactory, . . . it would go unquestionably to the heir."

The principle was also followed in D'Eyncourt v. Gregory (3 L. R. Eq., 382), decided in 1866 by Lord Romilly (M.R.) In this case, which was a case of the replacement of the old mansion upon certain settled estates by a new mansion, both larger in dimensions and more costly and magnificent in its fittings up, his lordship, after making certain preliminary statements and remarks, spoke of the internal fittings up of the new mansion as follows:—

"Both the painting and the tapestries could unquestionably be removed in this sense, that they could be taken down, and the place be either left open or be filled with satin; so likewise the satin in the frames could be taken down, and the gaps replaced by paper; and doubtless the paper, being stuck close to the wall, could not be removed. But, in my opinion, in all these cases, whether it be paper, or satin (or panels), or tapestry, they are all part of the wall itself, and they are fixtures not to be removed. In all these cases, the question is not whether the thing itself is easily removable, but whether it is essentially a part of the building itself from which it is proposed to remove it, as in the familiar instance of the grinding-stone * of a flour-mill, which is easily removable, but which is nevertheless a part of the mill itself, and goes to the heir. . . . With respect to the carved kneeling figures on the staircase in the great hall, and the sculptured marble vases in the hall, they appear to me to come within the category of articles that cannot be removed. I think it does not depend on whether any cement is used for fixing these articles, or whether they rest by their own weight, but upon this—whether they are strictly and properly part of the architectural design for the hall and staircase itself. . . . They resemble the stone of a mill, which is part of the mill itself, and goes to the heir-at-law."

Our principle would probably explain even the case of the Cider mill itself (quoted supra), upon which so many criticisms have been passed, and explain it moreover independently of the custom upon which Lord Hardwicke in Atkyns inclined to rest it; it would explain it, for instance, if we might assume that the inheritance which was the res principalis in the case was not purely and simply, or permanently, a cider manufactory, but was land primarily and mainly, and in fact almost exclusively, adapted for and devoted to agricultural purposes; and that the mill itself had an entire or individual existence after its removal. At all events our principle had been recognised at the date of the cider mill and for a long time before it. Thus we occasionally find it expressed in the cases given in the Year Books, and we more frequently detect it underlying those cases: and indeed it explains certain points in them which, but for the explanation it affords, would be contrarient to the more modern views. For example, in the 20 Hen. VII. (7 Year Book, 13, 24), in an action of trespass brought by an heir against the executor of his ancestor for the alleged tortious removal by the latter of a furnace which had been fastened with mortar to the frank tenement, we find that the Court of Common Pleas declared the removal to have been tortious for the reasons which follow, namely:—

"Those things which can neither be forfeited on outlawry in a personal action, nor be taken in execution, nor be distrained for rent, such things the executors shall not have; but a furnace, or a table fixed with posts in the floor, or a wainscot, or border fastened to the frank tenement, also doors, windows, and other such things as are annexed to the frank tenement, and made 'pur un profit del inheritance,' can neither be forfeited on outlawry, nor be taken in distress. . . . . But if they are removable, then are they not part or parcel of the frank tenement."

And again in the 21 Hen. VII., in a like action between like parties, and for a like alleged tortious removal, we find the judges giving the following opinions, namely—

Mr. J. Pollard was of opinion that the action would lie, for (as he remarked)—

"Such things as are fixed or fastened to the frank tenement will descend to the heir along with the inheritance, and moreover they will pass by feoffment with the frank tenement, e.g., where vats are fixed in the ground, whether in a brew-house or in a dye-house, they are appurtenances to the frank tenement, and are altered from the condition of chattels."

Mr. J. Kingsmill remarked—

"After it is fixed to the frank tenement, it is incident to, if it is not also parcel of, the frank tenement; and it will in all cases go with the frank tenement. . . . . And when a person fixes vats in brew-houses or in dye-houses, and then deceases, his heir shall have the vats; for immediately upon their fixation they are for the continual profit of the house, and it is therefore more reasonable that the heir should have them (he having also the frank tenement to which they are fixed), than that the executors should have them (they having nothing whatever to do with the frank tenement)."

It is the same principle which also explains that frequently quoted passage in the Touchstone (pp. 469, 470), where it is said that an executor "shall not have the incidents of a house, as glass, doors, wainscot, and the like, no more than the house itself." Nor is the principle affected, or, if affected at all, it is only affected to be confirmed by the passage in the Office of Executors (p. 53), which says that if the testator has only a term of years in the premises, and die before the term is expired, then his executor will succeed to his interest in the land, and also and in virtue thereof to his interest in the fixtures (deer, &c.) which belong to the land. And the principle is indeed generally recognised as having its foundation in reason and in good common sense.

This principle being established and the first branch of our subject having been completed, we proceed to the second branch or division of it, which is—the tenant's right to unfix or to remove fixtures other than strictly agricultural ones, which either rest upon the ground, or other res principalis, without being fixed in it, or which, if fixed in the ground, or other the res principalis, are so fixed in it as not to be finally or indefeasibly incorporated with or annexed to it in contemplation of law, and which therefore retain their individual entirety, both while they are fixtures and afterwards when they are severed. It is evident that this branch or division of our subject is much more complex in the matters which are the subject of it than is our first division; and we might therefore prima facie expect that the rule which is to express the law of fixtures in this case would be correspondingly more various or complex. And yet that law is not incapable either of brief exposition or of simple and clear expression.

First it appears that this second division is apparently threefold, as embracing three apparently separate or distinct heads or classes of fixtures, namely, (1.) Mixed Agricultural; (2.) Trade Proper; and (3.) Domestic or Ornamental.

With reference first to the Mixed Agricultural Fixtures of this division, they are to be distinguished of course from the purely agricultural ones, such as the barn in Culling v. Tuffnall, which has already been stated and criticised, and such as the buildings let into the ground and the necessary completions to buildings, exemplified by the other cases that were mentioned in our first division. They seem, however, to be not altogether different from those cases of furnaces, engines, &c., which have been quoted from the Year Books; for this latter class of fixtures were the effects as they are also the indications of the rise of modern wealth, being not indispensable to the bare or necessary cultivation of the ground or other the business of a farm, but being rather conveniences or utilities superadded to the early original list of necessities; and having had their origin under a milder law, they were protected from the operation of the older law by the equitable considerations which more modern manners supplied. Foremost among those equitable reasons was the favour shown to trade; and just as this one equity is the alone foundation of the law of the so-called Trade Fixtures, the second of the sub-divisions of this branch of our subject, so has it contributed the principal part of the foundation to the law of the so-called Mixed Agricultural Fixtures the first of these sub-divisions, for it has by counteracting defeated the operations of the older and stricter law of purely Agricultural Fixtures, and it has in fact assimilated in all or nearly all respects the law of the so-called Mixed Agricultural to the law of the so-called Trade Fixtures

Proper. Moreover, the operation, not indeed of the same but of a like equity, and of an equity moreover which was equally the effect and the indication of modern wealth, has assimilated in like manner the law of the so-called Domestic or Ornamental Fixtures to the united law of the so-called Mixed Agricultural and Trade Proper Fixtures, so that in fact the customary distinction of the fixtures of our second division into the three classes of Mixed Agricultural, Trade Proper, and Domestic or Ornamental is groundless or futile in itself, however much it may hitherto have been thought to be subservient either to clearness of exposition or to accuracy of conception. We shall therefore not retain this distinction of phrases, but shall endeavour to effect a unification of the law in the three aspects of it which they apparently denote.

Nor do we think that our attempt is either idle or unprecedented. It is not unprecedented, for Mr. Amos and Mr. Ferrard, in their well-reasoned but in some respects imperfect treatise on this subject, contend in one place, and contend truly although inaccurately, that in the passage next hereinafter quoted from the Year Books, the relaxation of the law in early times in favour of the tenant was not confined, as has been generally supposed, to trade erections alone, but extended to agricultural erections also. Nor is our endeavour idle, as we hope to prove by the success of it.

The passage from the Year Book to which we last referred is a further part or continuation of the passage already quoted under the year 20 Hen. VII., and is to the following effect:—

"If a lessee for years make a furnace 'pur son avantage' (or 'pur son plaisir'), or being a dyer, make vats and vessels 'pur occupier son occupation' for the time during which his tenancy is to last, then he may remove them; but if he permit them to remain fixed in the earth after the expiration of his term, then they become the property of his lessor; and so of a baker. Nor is it waste (in the opinion of some, although not also of others) to remove articles of this sort during the term."

Now with reference to this passage we should contend for a more thorough and complete extension in early times of the relaxation which was then made in the rigour of the old law of fixtures, and we would suggest that the relaxation (always excepting those strictly Agricultural Fixtures which belong exclusively to the old law) was general, and extended not merely to Trade Proper fixtures, but also and equally to the Mixed or Modern Agricultural, and to the Domestic or Ornamental classes of fixtures; and our contention and suggestion in this respect seem to be entirely borne out and supported by the later decisions to which we now proceed.

In proceeding with, or in resuming our inquiry into and investigation of, the cases upon this branch of our subject, we find that the principle which we were at pains to elaborate on a previous page here or now begins to be positively serviceable to us, reminding us (as it does) to first ascertain the quality of the inheritance or res principalis before attempting to adjudicate upon the fixtures or appendages to it. And again, that early agricultural relation, which we were also at pains to explain on a previous page, renders us here also or now a negative service which is almost as valuable as the positive one, reminding us (as it does), in its turn, that the rigour of the old law of that relation does not extend to the matters which are exclusively the subject of the new law. It follows, therefore, at once that in this second division of our subject, and in respect of all those fixtures which are the subject of the new law, equitable considerations having risen paramount over legal ones, the tenant is now as highly favoured as he was formerly depressed, and a long string of consentient decisions illustrates, as it corroborates, this indulgence. Thus, in the year 1704, it was held in Poole's case (Salk., 367) that certain vats put up by the tenant, who was a soap-boiler, were removable by him, and had therefore been lawfully taken by the sheriff under a fi. fa. upon an execution issued against him. Again, in the year 1799, it was held in the case of Dean v. Allalley (3 Esp., 11), that certain erections called Dutch barns, being sheds with a "foundation of brick in the ground, and uprights fixed in, and rising from the brick work and supporting the roof, which was composed of tiles, the sides being open," were not included within the scope of a covenant by a tenant whereby he had bound himself to leave all the buildings which were at the date of the lease already erected, or which should or might during the continuance of the lease be erected upon the land demised to him, Lord Kenyon (the judge who tried the case) being of opinion, that erections like the barn in question which were put up for the benefit of trade or manufacture, for the more advantageous carrying on thereof, were not included under the word "buildings" or "erections" expressed in the covenant, which he said were only such buildings and erections as were "annexed to . . . the reversionary estate,"—a subtlety of distinction the justice or correctness of which, although it is not at first sight apparent, becomes apparent enough when, on the one hand, that paramouncy of equitable over legal considerations, to which we have referred as characterising the relation of landlord and tenant under the new law, is taken into account, and when, on the other hand, it is also considered that the erections in question, although Agricultural, were of that Mixed or Modern Agricultural sort which we stated to be rather useful and convenient in the profitable management, than necessary to the bare or simple management of the farm, and that as being so they fell in fact under the mildness of the new, and were exempted from the rigours of the olden, law.

Again in 1801, in the case of Penton v. Robart (2 East, 88) it was held that a certain Varnish-house, put up by a tenant who was a maker of varnish upon the land demised, and being an erection which had a brick-foundation let into the ground with a chimney belonging to it, and which in its upper part or super-structure consisted of wood brought by the tenant from his former place of business, was removable by the tenant at the end of his term, and under the particular circumstances even after the end and full expiration thereof, Lord Kenyon (the judge who tried the case) resting his decision in this case also (as he had done in Dean v. Allalley, supra) upon the "costly" or supererogatory and unnecessary character of the fixtures, as distinguished from those which are barely necessary for the cultivation of the land as such —a distinction which may indeed be fathered upon Lord Kenyon, whose customary legal acumen perceived in it a means of observing the law at the same time that he escaped in the matter of modern fixtures from the early rigours of it.

Again, in the year 1830, in the case of Grymes v. Boweren (6 Bing., 437) it was held that a pump was removable by the tenant who had erected it; and although the decisions of the Lord Chief Justice (Tindall), and of the other judges who decided the case, proceeded to all appearance exclusively upon considerations suggested by the mode or measure of the annexation, yet we must assume that there was also in their minds an underlying conviction or perception that the fixture in question was not (as in fact it was not) one of the old agricultural class of fixtures, but was rather one of those convenient or useful erections peculiar to modern times. It may be, however, that in this case, and it appears beyond all question that in the cases which were decided subsequently thereto, the conviction or perception to which we have alluded dropped altogether out of view in respect of those so-called fixtures, which were removable in their entirety without damage to the freehold, and fixtures of the last-mentioned class came in consequence, by an abusive extension of the modern principle, to be regarded even when put up for the purposes of agriculture as being of an essentially chattel nature. Thus we find that in the case of Wansboro' v. Maton (4 A. & E., 884), decided in the year 1836, it was held in apparent confirmation of, yet in real contrariety to, the like case of Culling v. Tuffnal before set forth, that a barn (called a stavel-barn) consisting of "wood resting on, but not fastened by mortar or otherwise to certain caps or blocks of stone (called stavels or staddels) fixed into the ground or let into brickwork, the brickwork being built on and let into the ground in those parts where the ground was lowest, for the purpose of making an even ground for the barn to rest upon," was removable by the tenant who had erected it; for, in the words of Lord Chief Justice Denman (one of the judges who decided the case), "the first question to determine was, whether the erection was a part of the freehold; for if it was not united to the freehold, then it was no part of it; and as in fact it was not so united, it was therefore not a fixture," and Mr. Justice Little (another of the judges who decided the case) remarked, "In removing the barn, he does not disturb the freehold; . . he might take away this building, and substitute, for instance, a fowl-house for it, keeping always the same foundation. . . . This barn is kept in its place merely by weight."

It is most important to remark this change in the point of view from which the question of fixtures is regarded in the more modern decisions, for the effect of it was and is clearly to subdivide the class of the Mixed or Modern Agricultural Fixtures into two minor classes, namely—(1.) The class of fixtures which, although of the modern type, and therefore (as being subject exclusively to the modern law) removable by the tenant, are yet visibly and corporeally, or in some other particular manner, fixed to the land or premises, and so long as they are so fixed are for all the purposes of the modern law part and parcel of the freehold; and (2.) The class of fixtures which being, whether rightly or abusively, of the modern type, and therefore subject exclusively to the modern law, are yet neither visibly nor corporeally, nor in any particular manner, fixed into the land or premises, but are always and at all times chattels only. The importance of this subdivision appears more especially in its application to the law of distress. It is well known, and indeed it has repeatedly appeared in the quotations which have been made upon previous pages of this article, and more especially in those of them which are taken from the Year Books, that in early times the fixtures put up by a tenant were not distrainable by his landlord for rent; and the reason of their exemption from this process is too apparent for us to mention here. But when the old law came to be relaxed in the manner we have pointed out, then it was not so clear how that relaxation was to operate upon the law of distress; while the tenant acquired the advantage of removal, was he also to retain as before his right of exemption from distress? Or if he was to retain this latter right, was he to retain it in toto, that is to say, to its fullest extent, or was he to retain it as to part, and to remit it as to all the rest?

Now the law upon this matter, and in this respect, ending as it did in a compromise, wanted several decisions to settle it. For our purposes, however, the two decisions of Darby v. Harris (1 Q.B., 895), decided in the year 1841, and Hellawell v. Eastwood (6 Exch., 295), decided in the year 1851, sufficiently settle and express the law in its twofold modern distinction between fixtures that are distrainable and fixtures that are not so. In the case of Darby v. Harris, the fixtures regarding which the dispute arose, were "a kitchen range, a register stove, a copper, and also grates," annexed to the freehold in the ordinary manner and admitted to be "fixtures removable by the tenant." The contention on the part of the plaintiff, the tenant, was this—that this class of fixtures were not distrainable for rent; the endeavour of the defendant, the landlord, on the contrary, was this—to show that the alleged fixtures were in reality not fixtures, or at least not so much fixtures as they were chattels or personal estate, in which latter case he contended that they were lawfully distrainable for rent. The Court of Queen's Bench decided that the articles, the fixtures in dispute, were of the class that was not distrainable for rent, and for this reason (as appears from the several judgments which were delivered), that they were things which, from the nature of them, could not, after payment of the arrears of rent, be restored again to the tenant in their original plight and condition.

On the other hand, in the case of Hellawell v. Eastwood, the fixtures around which the contention centred were "cotton-spinning machines, fixed by means of screws, some into the wooden floor, some into lead, which had been poured in a melted state into holes in stones, for the purpose of receiving the screws," and the contention on the part of the plaintiff, the tenant, was, as in Darby v. Harris, that articles of the sort in question were parcel of the freehold, and, moreover, that they could not, if removed, be restored again in their original plight and condition, but Baron Parke (the judge who decided the case) was of opinion and held that they were in no sense part or parcel of the freehold, and on that count, therefore, were not exempted from distress; moreover that they were capable, after being removed, of being restored again in the like plight and condition, and, therefore, neither on that count were they exempted from distress; they were, therefore, lawfully distrainable. The learned Baron, after disposing of certain preliminary matters, proceeded in his judgment as follows:—

"The only question, therefore, is whether the machines when fixed were parcel of the freehold, and this is a question of fact. . . . Now, in considering this case, we cannot doubt that the machines never became a part of the freehold. They were attached slightly, so as to be capable of removal without the least injury to the fabric of the building or to themselves; . . . they were never a part of the freehold, any more than a carpet would be which is attached to the floor by nails for the purpose of keeping it stretched out. . . . They never ceased to have the character of movable chattels, and were therefore liable to the defendant's distress."

The reader, we trust, will not suspect us of having garbled this judgment for the purpose of serving our own particular views, for indeed the omitted passages are altogether irrelevant to the point which was in dispute, and having therefore no application to the particular matter, they are expressed with an unfortunate vagueness of generality which has caused them to be frequently misunderstood, as was indeed observed by Vice-Chancellor Wood in the important case of Mather v. Fraser (2 K. and J., 536) hereinafter set forth. But see Addenda, p. xi.

From the two cases which have been now latterly stated, it clearly appears that at the date of those cases the law of fixtures considered in the abstract had become as definitely and fully stated and known as it is at present, and accordingly the point in dispute thenceforth has been, and now is (as it then partly was) some fact or thing external to the law itself, being some peculiarity of circumstance—either (1.) In the method and measure of the alleged annexation to the freehold; or (2.) In the construction of some written document, which by the act of the contending parties themselves or otherwise has been made to govern or regulate their rights; or (3.) In the effect which is to be given to certain derivative rights, the consequences of certain derivative relations which have come (in whatever way) to be vested in and established between the contending parties.

In considering the subsequent decisions, it is, however, still most essential and necessary, not merely with a view to the consistency of our scheme, but also by way of a preservative against incorrectness in practical opinion and decision, to bear in mind the precise relation in which the modern law stands towards the ancient one in this matter of fixtures, and in particular, first of all to settle with ourselves whether the particular alleged fixture is of such a nature as to fall within the rigours of the old law; secondly to ascertain what is the quality of the inheritance in each particular case, and whether, therefore, the particular alleged fixture has or has not such a correspondence with or affinity for the inheritance as to have become not only actually but indissolubly united with it; and then thirdly, or lastly, and always in subordination to the matters firstly and secondly mentioned, to consider the weight which is to be attached to any one or more, or to all of those three external matters to which we have just referred, that is to say, the mode of the outward and visible annexation, the contents of some particular document, or the derivative positions of the contending parties. For it is only by keeping in mind all these numerous matters, and by observing their respective due priorities of importance, that we can either estimate new cases as they arise, or test the consistency of the existing cases either with each other, or (and more especially) with the earlier decisions.

By way of illustrating the application of this somewhat complex rule of decision, we may refer to the following cases (being all of them cases which have been already mentioned supra in a different respect or for a different purpose). (1.) To the case of Elwes v. Mawe, as an instance of the application of our rule having stopped short at the first part of it, the fixtures in that case having in fact been caught and stopped in the first sieve, by having been determined to be of the old or strictly agricultural kind. (2.) To the case of Lawton v. Salmon, and to the case of D'Eyncourt v. Gregory, as two instances of the application of our rule having proceeded as far as to the second part of it, the fixtures in these latter two cases having safely passed through the first sieve, but having been caught and detained in the second one, by having been determined to be fixtures of the modern class (whether Trade Proper or Ornamental), but to have at the same time presented that species of affinity for the res principalis, or inheritance which caused them to become straightway united in a chemical and indissoluble union with it. (3.) To the case of Hellawell v. Eastwood, as an instance of the application of our rule having been carried to its furthest stage, the fixtures in that case having passed through both the first and the second sieves, and having had their character determined for them by the first one of those subsidiary external considerations before enumerated, to wit, by the mode of their annexation to the freehold; and we may here mention that the rule in this last mentioned extent of its application will find constant illustration (alone or in combination with other ingredients) in the cases which are yet to be set forth in the sequel of our article.

There remain to be illustrated two further applications of our rule, namely — (1.) That application of it which is finally determined by some regulative document in the nature of an agreement; and (2.) That application of it which finally turns upon some derivative relation or relations which have come to be established in one or both of the contending parties towards some third person or persons. But inasmuch as the illustration of these latter applications of the rule forms in reality the substantive continuation of the Law of Fixtures, which is the subject of our article, in proceeding with that illustration, we in fact resume the consideration of our subject in its main or leading branch.

Now it might primâ facie be supposed that in accordance with that well-established principle of our law, whereby "modus et conventio vincunt legem," a written document in the nature of an agreement between the persons, the parties to it, would in all cases be the paramount consideration for counsel and judges to regard in forming their opinions in respect of the fixtures comprised or apparently comprised in it, or affected or apparently affected by it; and it has been customary for writers upon this branch of our law (with the notable exception, however, of Mr. Amos and Mr. Ferard) to make the existence or non-existence of such an agreement the principal criterion for the logical division of their subject. We may point out, for example, that in the two latest works upon the law of landlord and tenant, the work of Mr. Fawcett, and the joint work of Mr. Smith and Mr. Soden, this is the treatment which has been adopted. And yet if our historical deduction, as given on the preceding pages, is correct, and more particularly, if Lord Kenyon was justified (as we think he was), in taking the somewhat nice distinction, which he did take, in the case of Dean v. Allalley, supra—a distinction which is not (as sometimes supposed) at variance with the decision in West v. Blakeway, infra, or with the decision in Bidder v. Trinidad Petroleum Company, infra—then we, for our own parts, at least, should hesitate to accept with the same unguarded and unsuspecting readiness that certain others do, the fact of agreement or no-agreement as the paramount criterion in all cases whatsoever; although perhaps in the great majority of modern cases, and of cases presently arising, the factum or non-factum of an agreement is practically the primary, and, in many cases, the only consideration. We persist, however, in our opinion, as formerly expressed, that the true historical (and therefore also the only truly logical) importance of this criterion is that which we have assigned to it above, namely, an importance subordinate and secondary to the application of the two rules which respectively regard (1.) The amenability or non-amenability of the particular fixture to the old and rigorous law affecting the strictly agricultural class of fixtures; and (2.) The correspondence or non-correspondence of the particular fixture to the quality of the inheritance, whereby it becomes, or does not become, chemically united with it, and in a manner absorbed into and lost in it. With this explanation (which may possibly be liable to refutation) we proceed to set forth the cases into which an agreement has entered.

In the year 1807, in the case of Naylor v. Collinge (1 Taunt., 19), under a covenant by a trader-lessee to yield up in repair, at the expiration of his lease, "all erections and buildings" already at the date of the lease erected and built, or thereafter to be erected and built, upon the premises demised, buildings let into the ground, although erected by the tenant for the exclusive purposes of his trade, were held in accordance with the old law relating to buildings incorporated with the inheritance, confirmed (or at least, recognised and accepted) as that law was by the terms of the covenant, to be included in the covenant, and to be irremovable by the tenant; and in like manner, and for the like reason, in the year 1818, in a case of Penry v. Brown (2 Sta., 403), under a like covenant by a domestic-lessee, a verandah let into the ground, although put up by the tenant for ornament merely, was held to be irremovable by the tenant. It is, moreover, to be particularly noted that in the former of these two last mentioned cases, an exception from the terms of the covenant was allowed in favour of trade in respect of such of the buildings and erections as were made to rest on blocks or patens without being let into the ground, an allowance which was in strict accordance both with the letter, and with the spirit of the letter, of Lord Kenyon's decision in Dean v. Allalley, supra, and which seems, therefore, to corroborate, in no slight degree, our principle of subordinating the terms of the agreement to those grand old rules which we derived from our historical deduction. But to proceed,—in the year 1856, in the case of Burt v. Haslett (18 C.B., 163, and, on appeal, 893), under a covenant by a lessee (who was a linendraper) to yield up at the expiration of his lease the premises demised, together with "all . . . windows . . . and other things, . . . affixed or belonging thereto, . . . and together also with all . . . improvements . . . made upon the premises," a plate-glass front put in by the tenant in place of the old window, although not fastened otherwise than with wedges, was held to be included within the scope of the covenant, in consequence of the express words of the covenant, and in particular of the word windows occurring therein; and here again, it is of importance to observe that the spirit of Lord Kenyon's decision in Dean v. Allalley was fully recognised, for the window, although intended by the linendraper for the purposes of his trade alone, was as much the exclusive subject of the old law of the strictly agricultural fixtures, as buildings let into and incorporated with the soil, being in fact an outer window, which, like an outer door, is strictly NECESSARY to complete the house, and as being so becomes instanter part and parcel of the inheritance, and not removable by the tenant even who has erected it at his own expense, so that notwithstanding all the linendraper's ingenuity, his glass front was in fact caught in our first sieve, irrespectively of his covenant, which only confirmed or recognised our principle. Again, in the case of Mansfield v. Blackburne (6. Bing. N.C., 426), decided in the year 1840, under a covenant by the trader-lessee of a salt-spring to leave the salt-works (which the same lessee had also agreed to erect) in good repair at the end of his term, it was held that the iron salt pans, as being parcel of the salt works, were included, and were in consequence thereof become, although in their own nature removable, practically irremovable by the tenant, Tindal, C. J., remarking in his judgment in this case with, however, (it seems to us) one gross inaccuracy, as follows:—

"If this had been the ordinary case between landlord and tenant, as to the right of the latter to remove fixtures, or other things erected on the premises, at the end of the term, we should have entertained no doubt but that the salt-pans had been removable by the tenant, as well from the nature and description of their annexation to the freehold, as upon the doctrine laid down by Lord Mansfield in Lawton v. Salmon, that it would have been a different question if the springs had been let, and the tenant had been at the expense of erecting these salt-works; he might very well have said, 'I leave the estate no worse than I found it.' That would be for the encouragement and convenience of trade, and the benefit of the estate."

"But the question before us does not turn upon any general rule of law (sed quaere), but upon the interpretation of a positive contract into which the parties have entered with each other, and the point we have to determine is, whether under that contract it was the intention of both parties, that the salt-pans should be left at the determination of the term, or that the tenant should have the power to remove them."

Now, here also, the Chief Justice, although seeming to question our principle, unconsciously regulates his decision, and in fact he decided, in accordance with it. So, again, in the case of R. v. Topping (1 Maclel. & Y., 544), decided in 1825, in respect of certain smelting-engines, and in the case of Dumergue v. Rumsey (2 H. & C., 777), decided in 1866, in respect of the fixtures and fittings-up of a music-hall, an express clause in an agreement being held to have defeated (in the one case accidentally, in the other case intentionally) the tenant's right of removal, the fixtures became in consequence thereof instantly and indissolubly united with the inheritance, so as not to be leviable under a fi. fa. issued against the lessee. Such is the predominant vivacity or efficacy of the two considerations which we have designated paramount, and such also the readiness with which agreements not opposing coincide with them in their operation, to the utter disregard of every equitable consideration to the contrary.

Before, however, it is possible to maintain the absolute and universal paramouncy of our principle over all private stipulations and agreements whatsoever, it is necessary to inquire and know whether any covenant or agreement which not only does not coincide with it, but which directly aims at superseding or displacing it, has been allowed to, in fact, supersede or displace it. Now, there is the case of Sumner v. Bromilow (34 L.J. (N.S.), Q.B., 130), decided so recently as the year 1865, in which in a state of circumstances otherwise resembling the case of Mansfield v. Blackburne, supra, it was held that the salt-pans in question were removable by the tenant who had put them in, and that they were so removable by reason of a difference in the words of the covenant—a difference apparently suggested to the draftsman or conveyancer by the decision in Mansfield v. Blackburne, being the exception or reservation in express terms of the "salt-pans and other removable articles" out of the general scope or operation of the covenant. So that our cherished principle apparently succumbs, and the old law, it seems, may be displaced in the interests of trade, or, indeed, of any other interest, by the employment of apt words expressly (and not in intention merely) displacing or defeating it. The hallowed traditions of the past are indeed ever destined, in the natural course of jural development, to yield before the so-called imperative demands of modern life, and the Court of Queen's Bench, in particular, as at present constituted, has always shown more readiness than reluctance to break off from the past. Probably, however, it is better so, certainly it is more in keeping with the strong reality of modern regards to openly and directly recognise, instead of fictitiously ignoring while circuitously accepting, changes of the sort referred to. And at all events we, as mere writers stating what the law actually is, are compelled by this decision to recognise the maxim, Cuique juri pro se introducto renuntiare licet, in its free operation in respect of all fixtures, as well those of the ancient as those of the modern class. And yet, even while compelled to admit thus much, who that has followed the course of decision downwards as presented in this article, would hesitate for one instant to agree with us in our view of the desirability and indeed necessity of attributing to the first and second portions of our general rule, if not a paramouncy, at least a paramount importance as indispensable collateral considerations, because exercising an all-powerful influence when not directly, expressly, and laboriously excluded? Our general rule remains therefore, if not altogether unassailable, practically unassailed.

We shall give but one further illustration of the extremely vigorous, and indeed the instantaneous, operation of those first and second portions of our rule, even in spite of covenants and agreements, which might seem to expressly and directly exclude their operation. The case shall be that of Foley v. Addenbrooke (13 Mee. & W., 174) decided in the year 1844. The covenant in that case was to repair, and yield up in repair "the furnaces, fire-engine, iron works, dwelling-houses, and all other erections, buildings, improvements, and alterations, EXCEPT the iron work castings, railways, wimseys, gins, machines, and the movable implements and materials used in or about the said furnaces, fire-engine, iron works, and premises;" and it was held by the Court of Exchequer that under this covenant the defendants (who were the lessees) had a right to remove "whatever was in the nature of a machine or part of a machine, but not what was in the nature of building, or of support of buildings although made of iron (and that in such removal they might disturb such brickwork as was necessary, &c.)" Now what was the reason why the supports of buildings made of iron were irremovable, although they were in fact iron castings, and as such therefore within the exception of the covenant? Why, it was simply the operation meanwhile of the first and second portions of our rule. The iron supports had, in virtue of their application, ceased to be iron castings merely, and were become meanwhile indissolubly incorporated with the buildings of which they were the necessary complements.

Doubtless, however, it is true that the great majority of modern fixtures pass readily and at once through both our first and our second sieves, being neither of the strictly agricultural sort, nor yet of a character to chemically unite with the inheritance; and hence probably has arisen the prevalent confusion of thought, to which we have already more than once alluded, of supposing the agreement or covenant to be solely and entirely regulative of the removability or irremovability of the particular fixtures. There are numerous cases of this modern sort; we shall only quote one, or at the most two typical instances of them. One is that of Elliott v. Bishop (10 Exch., 496, and on appeal, 11 Exch., 113), decided in 1855, where, under a covenant by a building tenant to yield up at the expiration of his term the premises demised, together with all "locks, keys, bars, bolts, marble and other chimney pieces, foot-paces, slabs, and other fixtures and articles in the nature of fixtures" put up during the term, it was held that neither the so-called tenant's fixtures nor the so-called trade fixtures usual in the tenancy and trade of the defendant the sub-lessee (who was a licensed victualler) were included in the covenant, the interpretation of which turned (in the particular circumstances of the case) upon the mere general rules of the interpretation of written documents, according to which (as Mr. Bovill pointed out in his argument) verba generalia following upon enumerated particulars are to be construed as generalia ejusdem generis, and therewith the case was at an end. So, again, in the case of Duke of Beaufort v. Bates (31 L.J., N.S., Cha. 487), decided in 1861, the plaintiff being the freeholder, and the defendant an execution creditor of the sub-lessee, it was a mere question of interpretation, the matter in dispute being whether certain "tram-plates" fastened some to iron-sleepers and some to wooden sleepers, resting upon but not dug into the earth floor of a mine, were or were not included in the phrase "ways and roads" contained in a covenant in the lease. And yet even in these cases of apparent simplicity, it would be hazardous (and perhaps untrue) to state that the first and second portions of our principle received no regard; only they were evidently excluded from effective operation. And see Addenda, p. xi.

It remains to illustrate our rule of the Law of Fixtures in its application to those derivative relations subsisting in the two contending parties to which we have hitherto only alluded; this will complete our present article, from which (as the reader may have observed) we have carefully excluded the law of ecclesiastical fixtures, as being of too peculiar and unfamiliar a character to be treated promiscuously with the other classes of fixtures in this general review of the law.

Now the derivative relations in question (with the derivative rights corresponding to them), are of many sorts, but are chiefly the following:—

(1.) Mortgagee of lessor, or of lessee, (2.) Assignee (or trustee) in bankruptcy of lessor, or of lessee, (3.) Execution-creditor of lessor, or of lessee, (4.) Vendee of lessor, or of lessee, in their various permutations and combinations;

Also (5.) Executor and heir of lessor, or of lessee, (6.) Tenant for life and remainderman or reversioner, and (7.) Outgoing and incoming tenant.

From this enumeration it will appear that we have innovated upon the customary classifications; but we have done so with much carefulness, and from the bonâ fide conviction that the innovations will operate as improvements, introducing unity of conception, and abolishing, or at least reducing into their proper relations of subordination, the arbitrary distinctions and arbitrary co-ordinations of previous writers.

Now in respect of all these subordinate matters, there is much less intricacy of matter, and also much less variety of doctrine, than the multitude of the decisions which have been given upon them might naturally make believe. There is indeed a wonderful simplicity or similarity in all of them. And for the purpose of presenting them to the reader in such a way as to make this their character for simplicity and similarity apparent to him, only one small lemma is required in addition to the explanations already given in this article, and this lemma is also itself of so simple a character as to be rather a corollary from those explanations than a substantive assumption added to them. It is this—

It has already appeared that the strictly agricultural fixtures of the old law instantaneously coalesced with the land or realty to which they were annexed; they were therefore, one would primâ facie imagine, an interest in land. It is, however, commonly said that fixtures are NOT an interest in land within the meaning of the Statute of Frauds, so as to require a note or memorandum in writing under the 4th section of that Statute, and the case of Hallen v. Runder (1 Cr. M. & R., 266), decided in 1834, is commonly quoted in support of this opinion. But when that case is critically examined, it is seen that the equities involved in it were so strong and many, that they biassed the judges in their decision of it, and induced them to take advantage of the particular—the very particular—circumstances of the case, in order to ground upon them in the interest of particular justice a distinction which the writer submits was not borne out by general law, holding (as they held), contrary to the very clear and powerful, and withal the learned argument of Mr. Kelly, that as fixtures denoted the "tenant's right to remove," a contract to forego that right was not an interest in land within the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds. Now this decision was an acknowledged evasion of the law, and does not therefore, in our opinion, warrant the generality of the conclusion that is frequently, indeed commonly, drawn from it; for that conclusion affects to extend to fixtures in themselves, what was only asserted in Hallen v. Runder at the most of "a contract to forego the removal of them." If this be so, the quality of fixtures in themselves, whether they are real estate or personal estate, remains in truth an open question, and the determination of it is the lemma which we must premise.

Now, the principles of the law of fixtures, as developed in this article, would draw a distinction of the following kind—

(1.) That the strictly Agricultural Fixtures of the old law were and are beyond all question an interest in land, and that they are also permanently and indefeasibly so;

(2.) That the Modern Agricultural, the Trade Proper, and the Domestic or Ornamental classes of Fixtures are:—

(a.) Some of them, interests in land, defeasible by the act of the tenant who has the right to remove them; while again—

(b.) Others of them are chattels pure and simple, and are not even defeasible interests in land.

Further, all the passages which we have cited from the Year Books, and to which we may for present purposes generally refer the reader back, conspire to show that fixtures as well those of the modern as those of the old law, were part and parcel of the frank-tenement or freehold, so long as they continued annexed to it; and that such of them as were annexed by the landlord (that is to say, by the owner of the freehold) formed indefeasible parts of the freehold, whereas such of them as were put up by the tenant (the strictly agricultural fixtures being always excepted) were defeasible parts of the freehold, but became indefeasible parts of it immediately the time for their removal by the tenant had expired, and he had failed or omitted to remove them. Moreover, the views which are expressed in the Year Books are fully borne out by the subsequent decisions, both early and recent. Thus in the case of Lee v. Risdon (7 Taunt., 188), decided in 1816, Gibbs (C. J.) spoke as follows:—

"Many of these articles (household fixtures and furniture), though originally goods and chattels, yet when affixed by a tenant to the freehold, cease to be goods and chattels by becoming part of the freehold; and though it is in his power to reduce them to the state of goods and chattels again by severing them during his term, yet until they are severed, they are a part of the freehold, as wainscots screwed to the wall, trees in a nursery ground, which when severed are chattels, but standing are a part of the freehold, certain grates, and the like. And unless the lessee uses during the term his continuing privilege to sever them, he cannot afterwards do it, and it never, I believe, was heard of, that trover could be afterwards brought."

Again, in the case of Lyde v. Russell (1 B. & Ad., 394), decided in 1830, Lord Tenterden held that bells hung by a yearly tenant at the sole expense of the tenant himself, but allowed by him to remain fixed to the freehold after the expiration of his term, became the property of the landlord, and did not even when afterwards severed by the landlord resume the character of chattels so as that the tenant might bring trover for them. And in the very recent case of Pugh v. Arton (8 L.R. Eq., 626), decided by Vice-Chancellor Malins in 1869, it was held that tenant's fixtures cannot be removed after the expiration of the term, and that for that matter it makes no difference whether the lease expires by re-entry on forfeiture, or by effluxion of time.

Now what is there against these opinions? Nothing, but what admits of a ready explanation. First, there is the case of R. v. Londonthorpe (6 T.R., 377) decided in 1795, where it was held, that a post windmill put up by a tenant, but by express agreement between the tenant and his landlord made removable at any time by the tenant, and actually let by the tenant to a third party, was not such a tenement or rather was not a tenement in such occupation as entitled the tenant who had erected it to a settlement within the meaning of the Poor Laws. Again, there is the case of R. v. Otley (1 B. & Ad., 161) decided in 1830, where it was held that a windmill rented along with other property (the latter property being of an admittedly real character) was not a tenement within the meaning of the Poor Laws for the purpose of helping the pauper to obtaining a settlement under these laws, being a mere superstructure of wood resting by its own weight upon a brick foundation, no part of its machinery touching either the ground or the foundation. Now, of both these last mentioned cases, the most obvious remark to make is this, that their exceptional circumstances were the occasion of the question arising at all, and that under ordinary circumstances therefore, windmills and such like fixtures and à fortiori fixtures that were more manifestly so, would have been considered, and were in fact customarily considered, tenements or real estate for all purposes, and therefore also for the purpose of conferring a settlement within the meaning of the Poor Laws. And accordingly we find that in the case of R. v. St. Dunstan (4 B. & C., 6, 86) decided in 1825, it was held that certain fixtures demised to a tenant along with his tenement were held to be parcel of the demise or of the tenement for the purpose of entitling the tenant to such a settlement. And we also find that in the case of R. v. Guest (7 A. & E., 951), decided in 1838, it was held that machinery fixed in coal and iron mines by the persons, the lessees of the mines, were for the purposes of a poor rate which was being levied upon the mines to be regarded as forming part of the mines, so as to increase the assessable value of the freehold; but Lord Denman (C.J.), in holding to the effect stated, was careful to add that the question of the essential or abstract quality of the fixtures (whether real or personal estate) was not raised by the case. So, then, it appears that fixtures so far from being clearly not interests in land are in much more danger of being interests in land for all purposes whatsoever, and of being therefore also within the meaning of the Statute of Frauds.

It is necessary, however, to bear in mind the distinction which in a previous part of this article we pointed out as having been recognised in modern times, between the so-called fixtures that are either actually or constructively fixed for at least the time being to the freehold, and those so-called fixtures, which, whether of the Modern Agricultural, or of the Trade Proper, or of the Domestic or Ornamental Class are, and from first to last remain (rightly or abusively) of a purely personal or chattel nature. We have already had examples of this so-called chattel-fixture; we have a further example of such a fixture in the case of Davis v. Jones (2 B. & A., 165) decided in 1818, where it was held that certain jibs, parts of a machine which had been added to the machine by the tenant, a trader-lessee, during his term, and which were capable of being removed again from the machine without damage either to themselves or to it, were goods and chattels for which the outgoing or rather the out*gone* tenant might maintain trover for their non-delivery by the incoming or rather the in*come* tenant upon demand made. Abbott (C.J.), in delivering judgment in the case, adopted the following alternative mode of speech, "If these jibs are to be considered as personal chattels . . . On the other hand, if the jibs are to be considered as annexed to and parcel of the freehold, . . . " a dubiety in his lordship's mind which he ultimately settled by decreeing the jibs to be personal chattels. But the dubiety itself is important to note.

The result, therefore, of all the cases that have been adduced both pro and contra, goes to corroborate if not to establish the distinctions to which the principles stated hereinbefore would naturally lead. They are, moreover, distinctions which are indispensable to explain, and (let us add) which of themselves alone are sufficient to explain, the whole course of the subsequent decisions which have been made or had in the matter of those derivative rights and derivative relations to which we before referred; and surely this, their sufficiency, and this, their indispensability, go far to prove the inherent justice of them; and see also the distinction taken in Ex parte Astbury, infra. This lemma having been premised, we proceed to a consideration of the cases in detail.

We shall take these derivative relations in the order in which they were stated on a previous page.

In the case of ex parte Quincey (1 Atk., 477) decided in 1750, where A was mortgagee of the reversion in a brewhouse, subject to a lease for years granted by the freeholder his mortgagor to B, and where B had purchased the utensils of the brewhouse from his lessor, and had afterwards, and also after the mortgage to A, sold and assigned both the utensils and the lease to C, and when C thereupon or afterwards mortgaged both lease and utensils to D (who was in fact the original freeholder the mortgagor to A), and when D afterwards became bankrupt, it was not indeed held (because no decision was in fact arrived at), but Lord Hardwicke's strong opinion was, that the utensils were not included in the first mortgage, namely, that to A, and that the assignees of D were therefore entitled to them, at least as against A. But of this case our data are scanty, and the circumstances are complex; it may be, therefore, that the particular utensils which were in dispute were (as beyond question they had been treated as being) of a purely chattel character, although indeed it may also be (and but for that treatment of them it would have rather appeared) that they were fixtures of that sort which are a defeasible interest in land, in which latter case the tendency of Lord Hardwicke's opinion would (as we shall see) be contrary to the declared or express effect of subsequent and more especially of recent decisions, supposing always that B's separate purchase of the utensils may be ignored.

Again, in the case of Steward v. Lombe (1 Brod. & B., 506), decided in 1820, where A the freeholder mortgaged his land to B for 1000 years, and also in express terms "bargained, sold, and set over" to B a certain windmill erected upon the land but found by a jury not to have been a fixture in the sense of being either a defeasible or an indefeasible interest in the land, and where A the mortgagor continued in possession after the mortgage, and C a judgment creditor of his, issued an execution against him, it was held that C could not take the windmill upon his fi. fa.; Dallas (C.J.), distinguishing under the circumstances which have been described, the rights of an execution-creditor from those of an assignee in bankruptcy, a distinction which also differenced that case from the case of Horn v. Baker (9 East, 215), decided in 1808, where under circumstances otherwise resembling those in Steward v. Lombe supra, the assignees in bankruptcy were held to have a preferable title to that of an annuitant-mortgagee of the bankrupts; although, indeed in the case of Horn v. Baker supra, a further distinction was taken, namely, that while the vats, &c., which were not fixed to the freehold, passed (as we have said) to the assignees under the bankruptcy, yet the stills which were fixed to the freehold did not pass to them under the words of the Statute, "goods and chattels in the apparent ownership or possession of the bankrupt at the date of his bankruptcy," but that all such stills had passed as part and parcel of the land or brewhouse to the annuitant-mortgagee under her mortgage deed; and this distinction, as we shall see, has been carefully and invariably observed in all the subsequent decisions admitting of it. Horn v. Baker is indeed by Mr. Smith in his selection of leading cases, made the leading case upon the subject of this distinction; and it formed the almost sole ground of decision in respect of the fixed and movable machinery of a mill and iron forge in the case of Clarke v. Crownshaw (3 B. & Ad., 804), decided in the year 1832, where the like distinction arose, and between the like parties. And see Addenda, pp. xi, xii.

Again, in the case of Buckland v. Butterfield (2 Brod. & B., 54), decided in 1820, where A was lessee for years of a piece of ground and dwelling-house, and as such erected a conservatory, which was attached to, and (as was determined in the case) indefeasibly incorporated with, the dwelling-house, so as not even to be removable by the tenant himself who had erected it, and when A afterwards became bankrupt, and his assignees in bankruptcy claimed to remove the conservatory, it was held by Dallas (C.J.), that the assignees could not remove it as against the lessor the reversioner, and that too even although the bankrupt was himself entitled next in remainder after his lessor to the freehold and inheritance in the premises.

Again, in the case of ex parte Barclay (5 De G.M. & G., 411), decided in the year 1855, where A (who was by trade a publican), was lessee of a public house, and of other houses, and deposited by way of equitable mortgage his lease with B, giving at the same time the usual memorandum of deposit, and then afterwards became bankrupt while in possession both of the public house and of the other houses, and also of the trade and tenant's fixtures belonging to them (being the fixtures usual in the trade of a publican), it was held that B as such equitable mortgagee as aforesaid, was entitled to all the said fixtures (both the trade and the tenant's ones) as against the claim of A's assignees in bankruptcy, the fixtures not being (nor any of them being) in the order and disposition of the bankrupt within the meaning of the 125th Section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1845.

Again, in the case of Mather v. Fraser (2 Kay & J., 536), decided in the month of February, 1856, where A and B (who were copper-roller manufacturers) were the owners in fee and tenants in common of certain land and of the mills erected thereon, and mortgaged the same to C, and afterwards became bankrupt, it was held by Wood (V.C.), that the mortgage of the land and premises carried with it all the articles let into the soil or fixed to the freehold, whether by screws, solder, or any other permanent means, and that for that matter it made no difference that the purpose to which the land in question was applied by the bankrupts was trade or manufacture and not agriculture; and moreover, that as these fixtures passed as part of the freehold, no registration of them under the Bills of Sale Act (17 & 18 Vic., c. 36), was requisite for the purpose of conferring a complete title to them upon the mortgagees. The assignees in bankruptcy of the mortgagors had therefore no claim whatever as against the mortgagees to any of the fixtures above enumerated, but articles standing by their own weight alone were not to be considered fixtures for the purpose of conferring such a prior right upon the mortgagee, in the absence at least of a properly registered Bill of Sale specially applicable to themselves.

Again, in the case of Waterfall v. Penistone (6 Q.B., 876), decided in the month of July, 1856, where A (who was a paper-maker) was the owner in fee of a piece of land and of the mill erected upon it, and mortgaged the same with the machinery to B, and afterwards mortgaged the same with the machinery to C, and afterwards by Bill of Sale "bargained, sold, assigned and set over" by way of mortgage to the said C certain machinery erected since the date of the former mortgage to him, and in the same deed also covenanted that the mill and machinery comprised in the said former mortgage to C should be charged in addition with the money advanced upon the said second mortgage to him, and where A afterwards became bankrupt, C not having registered his said second mortgage as a Bill of Sale within the prescribed period of twenty-one days from the date thereof, it was held that the assignees in bankruptcy of A were entitled to the machinery comprised in the said

Bill of Sale, as fixtures of a chattel-nature and which had been treated as such by the parties to the third of the above-mentioned three mortgages, such third mortgage being primarily and characteristically or essentially a Bill of Sale, and not a freehold conveyance, notwithstanding the covenant also contained in it.

Again, in the case of Walmsley v. Milne (7 C.B., N.S., 115), decided in the year 1859, where A (who was a brewer, inn-keeper, and bath proprietor) was owner in fee of a piece of land, and mortgaged it while bare of all erections to B, and afterwards built erections of various sorts upon it, and then B after those erections transferred his mortgage to C, and then A became bankrupt, it was held that the assignees in bankruptcy of A had no claim as against C, the transferee of the mortgage of the land to the said erections, or to any of them, although these erections were put up for the exclusive purposes of the mortgagor's aforesaid trades, being a steam-engine, and boiler, a hay-cutter, a malt-mill or corn-crusher, and a pair of grinding-stones, and although they were also (or at least some of them were) capable of being removed without injury either to themselves or to the land; and the mortgage deed as it was not in any sense a Bill of Sale, so it required no registration to complete its efficacy, nor was its efficacy affected by the mortgagor's continuing in possession of the land, and of all the said fixtures and things up to the date of his bankruptcy.

Again, in the case of Cullwick v. Swindell (3 L.R., Eq., 249), decided in the month of December, 1866, where A was owner in fee of a certain dwelling-house, and also of a certain warehouse, and mortgaged the same to B, and then entered into partnership with C, and then A and C, together as such partners in their trade (which was that of iron-merchants), put up certain trade fixtures upon the premises, and afterwards executed a deed under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, whereby they conveyed all their property to D, for the benefit of their joint and separate creditors, it was held (and chiefly upon the principle established in a case of ex parte Cotton, 2 M.D., & D., 725), that B as such mortgagee as aforesaid was entitled to all the said trade fixtures as against D, notwithstanding their erection subsequently to the date of his mortgage, and in part by a person who was not a party to the mortgage deed.

Again, in the case of Boyd v. Shorrock (5 L.R., Eq., 72), decided in 1867, where A and B (who were partners in the cotton-manufacturing trade) were lessees for years of a mill and of the machinery demised with it, and also of an adjoining piece of bare land, and erected further machinery and fixtures upon the piece of bare land, and then mortgaged to C the said mill and the machinery demised therewith and "all other machinery, whether fixed or movable then standing and being, or which at any time thereafter during the continuance of the security might be, in and about such last mentioned mill and premises," and then afterwards became bankrupt, the mortgage deed not having been registered as a bill of sale, and A and B having continued in possession up to the date of their bankruptcy, it was held that C was entitled as against the assignees in bankruptcy of A and B to all the machinery (with the fixtures) in and about the mill and premises as well that part of it which was subsequently added by A and B themselves as that part of it which was included in the original demise, and this notwithstanding that the machinery was put into the floors of the mill in such a manner as to admit of its easy removal in an entire state without damage to the freehold of the mill.

Again, in the case of Climie v. Wood (3 L.R., Exch., 257, and on appeal 4 L.R., Exch., 328), decided in 1868-9, where A was owner in fee of two pieces of land, and mortgaged one of them (hereinafter called Piece No. 1) to B, and afterwards erected an engine-house upon the two pieces of land putting an engine and boiler into it, and afterwards mortgaged the other piece of land (hereinafter called Piece No. 2) to C, and then executed a Deed of Inspectorship, and afterwards B (under a power contained in his mortgage deed) sold Piece No. 1 to D, it was held that the mortgagees of the two pieces of land and the persons claiming under them by sale or transfer were entitled to the engine and boiler put into the engine-house in preference to the trustees of the Inspectorship Deed, or persons claiming under them by purchase; Kelly (C.B.), who delivered the judgment of the court, saying towards the conclusion of his judgment as follows:—

"The result is that the old maxim of 'Quidquid plantatur solo, solo cedit,' applies in all its integrity to the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee, and that trade fixtures constitute no exception. It follows from this, that the findings of the jury, that the steam engine and boiler were fixed by the mortgagor for their better use, and not to improve the inheritance, and that they could be removed without any appreciable damage to the freehold, become immaterial, for the right of the mortgagee attaching by reason of the annexation to the land, the intention of the mortgagor in respect of them cannot prevail against the legal effect of the deed."

Again, in the case of ex parte Astbury, ex parte Lloyd's Banking Company, In Re Richards, (4 L.R., Ch. App., 630), decided in July, 1869, where A (who was an iron manufacturer), was lessee for years of certain rolling mills, and made an equitable mortgage of them by deposit to B, and afterwards became bankrupt, it was held upon a special case stated between the mortgagee B, and the assignees in bankruptcy of A, that (besides the fixed machinery with respect to which no question seems to have arisen) of certain duplicate iron rolls of various sizes made to be fitted into the rolling machines, such of them as had been actually fitted into the rolling machines went to B the mortgagee along with the fixed machinery, while all such as had not yet been used in that way went to the assignees in bankruptcy of A (a distinction or refinement which may probably vary the decision in such a case as that of Davis v. Jones, supra, should any such case occur in future); and it was also then held, that certain straightening plates were fixtures and passed as such to the mortgagee, but that certain weighing machines were not fixtures, and belonged to the assignees in bankruptcy; Giffard (L.J.), in his judgment, stating as follows:—

"I think that if a man mortgages a machine, and afterwards, the machine itself being perfect, and fitted with rolls and everything else connected with it, other rolls are sent for to be used with the machine, but those rolls cannot be used unless and until they are fitted to the machine, it would be going a long way to say that the mortgagor shall be compelled to fit those rolls to the machine, and should be precluded from saying that they do not form a part of the machine."

Again, in the case of Longbottom v. Berry (39 L.J., N.S., Q.B., 37), decided in December, 1869, where A (who was a woollen cloth manufacturer), was the owner and occupier of a piece of land with the building then erected upon it, and mortgaged the same by equitable deposit to B, and then built a mill upon the land, and fitted up the mill with steam engines and with the other machinery which was necessary for his trade, and then by Bill of Sale assigned to C "all the machinery, fixtures, implements, utensils, effects, and things," mentioned in a schedule, and including in fact, all the machinery and articles in the mill, and then afterwards executed a legal mortgage to B the said equitable mortgagee, it was held that all the machines which were fixed in a quasi-permanent manner to the floor, roof, or side-walls, passed to B under his mortgage, but that those which were merely movable articles passed to C under his bill of sale.

Lastly, in the case of Tebb v. Hodge (39 L.J., N.S., C.P., 56), decided in November, 1869, where under circumstances of some complexity, a question having arisen between A who alleged himself to be an equitable mortgagee of B on the one hand and the assignees of B on the other as to the right to certain fittings put up by B, it was held that A was in fact the equitable mortgagee he alleged, and the further decision of the question was left to follow as of course.

Such having been the general course of the decisions in cases primarily affecting mortgagees, and these decisions having also sufficiently illustrated the law as it affects assignees in bankruptcy, and even vendees, and having also partially illustrated the law as it affects execution-creditors, it remains to adduce only one or two more cases affecting execution-creditors before proceeding to the three other divisions (which are as yet untouched) of executor and heir, tenant for life and remainderman, outgoing and incoming tenant.

In Poole's Case already cited, a case decided by Holt (C.J.) in the year 1704, it was held that of certain trade fixtures set up by A who was lessee for years of a house in Holborn, such of them as were removable by A, were also seizable in execution by the sheriff upon a fi. fa.; but this holding was apparently not to extend to a pavement, &c., put into the ground by A, and not removable by him during his tenancy or afterwards.

Again, in the case of Winn v. Ingleby (5 B. & A., 625), decided in 1822, a distinction was taken in respect of the estate of the execution-debtor in the premises to which the alleged fixtures were attached; and it was held that the sheriff had no right under a fi. fa. to seize such fixtures where the house in which they were situated was the freehold of the execution-debtor. It is evident, however, that this distinction has now ceased to be of any practical importance since the Statute 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, has extended the sphere of the law of execution.

Lastly, in the case of Minshall v. Lloyd (2 Mee. & Wel., 450), decided in 1837, where A (who was a worker of coal mines) was lessee for years of a colliery subject to a proviso for re-entry on insolvency, and erected certain steam engines,

&c., &c., affixed in the usual manner to the soil, and afterwards assigned the colliery with the engines, &c., to trustees for an annuitant, with a power of sale upon default, and A's lessor afterwards re-entered, the trustees not having then as yet exercised their power of sale, and the sheriff afterwards and before the annuity-trustees had exercised their power of sale, seised the engines and other articles in the colliery under a fi. fa. at the suit of an execution-creditor of A, it was held that the annuity-trustees could not recover the steam engines in trover against the sheriff, although the deed of assignment to them was not avoided by their omission to take possession and exercise their power of sale upon A's default in payment of the annuity.

Passing now to the cases which illustrate the law of fixtures as it affects the executor or executors and the heir or heirs of a deceased person, whether lessee or owner in fee of land, it is evident that the heir and the executor equally claim as volunteers, and they have therefore neither of them any equity over the other. As between themselves, therefore, the law is plain, that according as the res principalis or land goes to the one or to the other of them, so does the res accessoria or fixture go to the one or to the other. This explains how it was that in the passage quoted from the Office of Executors on a previous page, the fixtures although part of the house went to the executor; for there the house was leasehold. But the exceptional character of the passage referred to only proves and corroborates the general rule (as it is to be extracted from the cases), namely, that where the deceased is the owner in fee, there the fixtures which are such (being as they must be indefeasible parts of the inheritance) go to the heir and not to the executor, and only those things which are not fixtures in any proper sense, either actual or constructive, but which are and continue mere personal chattels, go to the executor and not to the heir.

This rule, it is true, appears in certain cases to have been departed from, or even violated; and the case of Squire v. Mayer (Freem., 249), decided in 1701 is an instance in point. It was there held that a furnace though fixed to the freehold, and although purchased with the house, and also hangings nailed to the walls should go to the executor, and not to the heir—a determination stated to have been contrary to Herlakenden's Case (4 Co.), meaning to the case of Warner v. Fleetwood already quoted. But of this case two possible explanations may be given; either (1.) That the purchase of the house and the purchase of the furnace, although the two purchases were made at one and the same time, were essentially distinct transactions, and had been treated as such by the deceased, who had therefore by his treatment of them both at the time of the purchase and afterwards up to the date of his death, prevented that coalescence of the fixture with the freehold which would otherwise have naturally followed; or, (2.) That the fixtures in question in the case were of a peculiarly expensive and unnecessary sort, and had exhausted the personal estate in an excessive degree, so as that there was a strong equity of creditors or of other persons calling for a mitigation of the rule. Either of the two explanations just given would also, it is clear, explain the decision in the Cyder-mill Case, supra, supposing that decision to have been rightly given. Perhaps, however, the latter explanation is the more likely one of the two; for the rule of the law of fixtures as between heir and executor, as before expressed, must be taken to be subject to this partial mitigation, a mitigation moreover which may be thought to be peculiarly in keeping with the spirit of modern times, for there may now be as much waste of personal as there was formerly of real estate. Possibly, however, neither of the two explanations which we have suggested removes the discrepancy; and if so, then the discrepancy must remain, but the practical effect of the decision or decisions may be regarded as nil, so far as they would discredit the general rule before expressed.

The case of Cave v. Cave (3 Vern., 508), decided in 1705, is an authority in support of that rule; for it was there held that pictures and glasses put up instead of wainscot or where wainscot would otherwise have been put, should go to the heir and not to the executor. There is, however, a case of Harvey v. Harvey (2 Str., 1141), decided in 1741, in which it was held (in apparent contradiction to Cave v. Cave), that hangings, tapestry, and iron backs to chimneys should go to the executors and not to the heir; it may, however, be remarked of this case, that we know neither whether the principal building was leasehold, nor in what manner the fixtures in question were put up, or whether they were not in fact duplicates not yet put in use, or old used-up articles which had ceased to be in use, any one of which circumstances would sufficiently account for the apparent contrariety.

In this conflict of the early authorities, we gladly resort to the more modern decisions, and in particular to the typical case of Fisher v. Dixon, a decision which is entirely in favour of the heir as against the executor to the extent of our general principle, that that one of the two conflicting parties who takes the house, should also take such of the fittings or furnishings of the house as are necessary to complete the conception of it as a properly habitable abode. This decision has, moreover, been so frequently followed and so frequently referred to supra, that it may here stand alone and supersede the necessity of a detailed statement of or reference to the other modern decisions.

Passing next to the cases which affect the relation between tenant for life and remainderman or reversioner; here it is evident that the heir shall have nothing as against the remainderman or reversioner, for that the land in virtue of which the heir's claim (if he had any claim) would arise has passed from him to the next person in the succession, and this latter person becomes substituted for him, just as a devisee or other successor might have been. And this substitution having been once effected, do not the persons, the respective claimants, namely, the remainderman or reversioner and the executor of the deceased tenant for life or in tail, appear before us as volunteers equally as the heir and the executor did on a former occasion? The mitigation which was allowed in favour of the executor on that occasion would also be allowed in his favour on this occasion, yet with perhaps less readiness of indulgence; for in this latter case, the executor's testator, not having been himself the full or sole owner of the land, or indeed the owner of it at all, but holding rather in virtue of the ownership of the person who created the entail or settlement, would be obnoxious to the rule which we have already quoted from the "Institutes of Justinian," that he who builds upon another man's ground, knowing that it is another man's, must be taken to build for the good of the land, and not of himself. Now these principles, so far as they relate to buildings and the necessary completions of buildings, are entirely borne out by the very carefully considered decision which was pronounced by Lord Romilly in the case of D'Eyncourt v. Gregory, to which we have so often referred, and to which we need here do nothing more than refer again.

The case of Dudley v. Warde (Amb. 113), decided so early as 1751, is an illustration of the MITIGATION in favour of the executor to which we have alluded; and just as D'Eyncourt v. Gregory furnishes us with the principle of the general rule, so Dudley v. Warde may be said to furnish the principle of that mitigation, in other words of the limitation of the rule, for it was held in the latter of these two cases, and clearly upon the old and now familiar principle of favouring trade, that a furnace erected in a colliery by a tenant for life (or in tail), went on the death of such tenant to his executor, and not to the remainderman. Now, it is clear that this decision was necessary for the purposes of encouraging trade generally, by the assurance which it gave to tenants for life under similar circumstances of their personal estate being re-couped after their death, the extraordinary disbursements which it should have been put unto during their life by reason of the imperative necessities of trade; nor is it at all in conflict with the case of D'Eyncourt v. Gregory above referred to; indeed the principle of the reconciliation of the two cases is afforded by the case of Dudley v. Warde itself in the distinction which was there taken between the particular fire-engine which has been mentioned, and two other like engines mentioned in the case, and therein stated to have been left to go to the remainderman rather than to the executor, contrary to the letter at least, if not to the spirit, of the decision in Squire v. Mayer, supra—the latter two engines having been put up and left by a tenant-in-tail, whose estate had preceded that of the last deceased tenant, so that they had in fact already coalesced with the inheritance at the time the inheritance devolved upon the deceased.

Lastly, the relation of out*gone* to in*come* tenant is one which follows as a natural deduction or corollary from the principles we have established. In examiniug this relation, the first point to be considered in connection with it is this,—the precise state of matters existing between the out*gone* tenant and his landlord at the time of the outgoing of the former. If there be nothing special in that relation, then the outgone tenant immediately he is outgone, ceases to have any right to the fixtures, whether defeasible or indefeasible interests in land which he may during his term have set up; and the in*come* tenant therefore takes the land plus all these fixtures, and is entitled to hold them for the term of his tenancy without interference from anyone, whether landlord or out*gone* tenant. The in*come* tenant has not, however, any property or interest in them as fixtures; but his interest in them so far as it extends, is an interest which arises under the demise, the fixtures being already become at the date of the demise part and parcel of the inheritance. Again, if any special stipulation or agreement has been entered into between the incoming tenant and the outgoing one, and that agreement or stipulation has been entered into with the concurrence or knowledge and assent (actual or constructive) of the landlord, then the terms of that stipulation so far as they modify the landlord's legal rights will as a matter of course bind the landlord, and so will regulate the relation between the out*gone* and the in*come* tenants. It would be a mistake, however, to suppose that whatever binds the landlord personally will also bind the income tenant, for the rule, as we shall shortly see, is often all the other way. But it is desirable to note in this place, and to note carefully, that it is through the intermediation of the landlord between the outgoing and the incoming tenants that the relation subsisting between these two latter becomes derivative, as we have described it, for indeed their landlord is to them what (roughly speaking) the ancestor is to the executor and heir, or what the settlor is to the persons the successive tenants for life or in tail under the settlement. But along with this rough or general resemblance, there are certain differences of minor yet of essential importance in the relation of outgoing and incoming tenant, which necessitate the more particular consideration of that relation and of the incidents thereto. This more particular consideration will also form a conclusion to this treatise that is as natural and fitting as it is indispensable to the completeness of it.

The question before us is this—what right the outgone tenant has (and whether as against the landlord or the income tenant) to recover fixtures or chattel fixtures after the expiration of his term, and in what way may he assert that right, or by what remedy enforce it, where it is questioned or withheld? Now, four cases in particular have been decided upon this question, or some part of it, namely, Penton v. Robart, in 1801; Weston v. Woodcock, in 1840; Roffey v. Henderson, in 1851; and Leader v. Homewood, in 1858; and our question must find its answer from these cases. The cases are, however, found upon examination to be slightly different or contrary in the tendencies or effects of their decisions, the first of the four seeming to establish or at least to favour a laxer and apparently more liberal rule, the latter three a stricter and apparently more rigorous one. A closer scrutiny of their details is therefore necessary, but this scrutiny of contrary instances will, in accordance with the familiar rule of science, should at least the decisions be (as we are bound to assume they are) themselves correct, result in the ready and simultaneous evolution both of the rule and of the necessary exceptions or limitations to it.

The facts of the case of Penton v. Robart (2 East, 88) were these—Penton had demised to X, and X's executors had underlet to Y, part of the land demised, and Y had underlet to Robart, with permission from Y to Robart to erect a building for the purpose of making varnish. Penton gave X's executors notice to quit, and in accordance with or at least in consequence of that notice the term of the original demise expired at Michaelmas, 1800. Penton also recovered in ejectment against Robart, but Robart, notwithstanding, remained in possession after Michaelmas, 1800, and after the recovery in ejectment, and while so remaining in possession he pulled down the wooden superstructure of the varnish house, leaving, however, the substructure of brick, and he also (while so remaining in possession) carried away the materials of the wooden superstructure. For these acts (both for continuing in possession after the expiration of the original term, and after the ejectment, and for pulling down and removing the wooden part of the varnish house), Penton brought trespass against Robart for breaking and entering his yard, &c., and there, without the leave or licence of the plaintiff, pulling to pieces the said varnish house, and carrying away certain timbers, &c., and disposing thereof to his, the defendant's, use. Robart, so far as related to the trespass for breaking and entering the plaintiff's yard, confessed the same, and let judgment go by default, but so far as related to the removal of the wooden superstructure of the varnish house, contended that he had a right to take down and remove that. And Lord Kenyon, regarding this superstructure as analogous to any engine or other loose machine which was only steadied by, or made to rest upon, the brick foundation or substructure, decreed its removability on the ground of the favour shown to trade; and Mr. Justice Lawrance drew this very convenient distinction — Robart admits that he was a trespasser in coming upon, or continuing upon, the land, but he contends that he was not a trespasser de bonis asportatis. And accordingly a verdict was found for the plaintiff, as to the trespass in breaking and entering, with 1*s*. damages, and for the defendant as to all the rest of the trespass.

The facts of the case of Weeton v. Woodcock (7 Mee. and W., 14), were these—Plaintiff had demised to X a cotton factory, with the warehouse, engine, and engine house, furniture, implements, and machinery, for the term of seven years from May 12, 1836, subject to determination on the bankruptcy of X, and with a covenant by X to keep up a good steam engine and boiler, and to leave the same to plaintiff in good repair at the end of his tenancy, otherwise to pay the value thereof. X was made a bankrupt on April 16, 1838, and the defendants having been appointed his assignees took possession of the premises in that capacity, and then afterwards the plaintiff made an entry on the premises on May 30, 1838, under the forfeiture clause in the lease, the assignees nevertheless continuing in possession, but not having meanwhile, nor until June 20, 1838, sold (although on the last mentioned day they sold), the steam engine boiler, which was the subject of dispute in the case. The plaintiff now brought trover to recover the boiler, or its value, against the assignees. Mr. B. Alderson, in giving judgment, said—

"The rule to be collected from the several cases decided on this subject seems to be this, that the tenant's right to remove fixtures continues during his original term, and during such further period of possession by him, as he holds the premises under a right still to consider himself as tenant. [But not longer.] In the present case, this boiler was removed after the entry for a forfeiture, and at a time after the assignees had ceased to have any right to consider themselves as tenants. And further, even if they had the right, in a case where the entry determining the tenancy is the act of a THIRD person, to consider themselves entitled to a reasonable time for removing the fixture, the jury have found that they did not avail themselves of that privilege."

And the plaintiff was accordingly held entitled to recover.

The facts of the case of Roffey v. Henderson (17 Q.B., 574) were these—Bowler had leased to plaintiff certain premises for a term of twenty-one years, and had afterwards, and before the expiration of such term, sold to plaintiff certain personal chattels belonging to Bowler, fixed and fastened to the said premises, and being (among others) bell-pulls, cranks, hooks, hat-pins, blinds, ranges, ovens, stoves, boilers, shelves, closets, and dressers. Then towards the expiration of plaintiff's term, Bowler wrote a letter to him, at his request, giving him permission (as plaintiff alleged) to continue all the said fixtures or fastened chattels in their unsevered state after the expiration of the term, for the purpose of enabling plaintiff to sell the same to the incoming tenant, if the latter should wish to purchase them, and if not, then for the purpose of enabling plaintiff to enter upon the expiration of the term, and disannex and remove all the said fixtures and fastened chattels. And the articles in question accordingly remained unsevered at the end of plaintiff's term, and defendant became, in due course, his next successor in the tenancy, under a lease by deed from Bowler; but defendant refused to purchase the said articles, or any of them, or to permit the plaintiff to enter upon the premises for the purpose of disannexing and removing the said fixtures, or any of them. And the plaintiff accordingly brought trover to recover them against the defendant. But the Court of Queen's Bench rejected plaintiff's claim. Mr. J. Pattison thought Bowler's letter insufficient as a license to plaintiff to enter and remove the articles, appearing (for he thought it appeared) to amount to no more than saying, "Make what bargain you can with the incoming tenant." It was, moreover (he said), intended to have a prospective operation, and could therefore (not being by deed) have no effect, beyond at the most, personally binding the landlord (Bowler) to make such a bargain with his incoming tenant as should be consistent with the plaintiff's just expectations under the letter of license to him. At all events, it could not bind the incoming tenant, the defendant, in any way. And then again (he proceeded), it not appearing that these articles had been disannexed from the freehold, and the presumption, therefore, being that they had continued annexed, trover did not lie for them. Mr. J. Coleridge and Mr. J. Wightman delivered judgments to the same effect. So that plaintiff failed, and apparently in respect of all the articles before enumerated, as well those which were fixtures proper as those which were fastened chattels.

The facts of the case of Leader v. Homewood (5 C.B. N.S., 546), were these—The plaintiff was lessee of premises in Mount Street, Lambeth, for a term which would expire at Michaelmas, 1857. In the month of January, 1857, and onwards to the month of June in the same year, the plaintiff and his landlord had been interchanging communications with each other as to a renewal of the lease, but after the latter date, all such communications were broken off, the landlord having by that time definitely refused to grant a renewal. The plaintiff then suffered his term to expire, not having meanwhile removed certain kitchen ranges and other fixtures and effects, which were the subject of the present action; he, moreover, declined giving up possession, and required first to be served with a demand of the premises, under s. 213 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852. On the day after service of this demand, he proceeded to quit the premises, and to remove the articles in question, some of which were naturally mere goods and chattels, while others of them were fixtures, part of the latter having been duly disannexed, part of them still remaining annexed. On the evening of the day following the last mentioned day, the plaintiff came with a van to his old premises for the purpose of removing these goods and chattels and fixtures, but he found the door fastened. The defendant, however, was upon the premises, being at the time in possession as intending lessee of the whole under an agreement for a lease from the landlord, and having indeed also been until Michaelmas, 1857, in possession of part of the premises as sub-lessee of plaintiff. The defendant, however, refused to admit plaintiff, or to allow him to remove any part of the goods or chattels, or of the fixtures, whether annexed or disannexed. And plaintiff, for this refusal on defendant's part, brought an action against defendant for converting and detaining the articles in question. The jury found that plaintiff had not abandoned the goods, and that defendant had been guilty of a conversion of them; and they returned a verdict for plaintiff, damages 117*l.* The defendant in accordance with leave reserved at the trial, afterwards moved to enter a verdict for him, or a nonsuit, or to reduce the damages, if the Court should be of opinion that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover in respect of those of the fixtures which had remained annexed or unsevered. And upon the hearing of this motion, the Court, after taking time to consider, delivered judgment for the defendant as to all such unsevered fixtures. Mr. Justice Willes observing as follows :—

"The law as to the limit of time within which a tenant is allowed to sever from the freehold the fixtures which are usually called 'tenant's fixtures,' is by no means clearly settled. According to the older authorities, the rule was, that he must sever them during the term. But in Penton v. Robart (2 East., 88), it appears to have been considered that the severance might be made even after the expiration of the tenant's interest, if he has not quitted possession. However, in Weeton v. Woodcock (7 M. & W., 14), the rule was laid down that the tenant's right continues only during his original term, and 'such further period of possession by him as he holds the premises under a right still to consider himself as tenant.' It is perhaps not easy to understand fully what is the exact meaning of this rule, and whether or not it justifies a tenant who has remained in possession after the end of his term, and so become a tenant at sufferance, in severing the fixtures during the time he continues in possession as such tenant. But the rule, whatever its exact meaning may be, is plainly inconsistent with the agreement relied on by the counsel for the plaintiff in the present case, viz., that the right of the tenant continues till he has evinced an intention to abandon his right to the fixtures: and that consequently the verdict of the jury, which has negatived any such intention, is conclusive in his favour. But it is unnecessary to consider the import of the rule with reference to the right of a tenant at sufferance during the continuance of such tenancy, because in the present case, the landlord had re-entered, and thereby put an end to the tenancy, before the plaintiff attempted to enforce his right. He cannot, therefore, sustain any claim for damages in respect of the defendant's having prevented him from severing the fixtures; for at that time the plaintiff had ceased to be a tenant of any kind, or to hold the premises under any right still to consider himself as such."

Now upon this statement of these four cases, it appears, upon a comparison of the several judgments delivered in them, limited as those judgments must be by the particular circumstances of the cases to which they respectively belong,—

(1.) That in actions against an outgone tenant by his late landlord (such as were the actions in Penton v. Robart and Weeton v. Woodcock), the tenant may safely keep, as against his landlord, the fixtures which he has recovered quocumque modo, even although such recovery has been effected after the expiration of his term, in all cases where that expiration has been occasioned consequentially upon the premature or unexpected determination of the tenancy or estate of his lessor, and without his act, or without his knowledge, because in every such case the ex-tenant's liability in trespass for entering upon the land of his late landlord is nominal merely, giving (as it gave in Penton v. Robart) one shilling or one farthing damages only; but the tenant may not safely keep as against his landlord, nor can he at all recover as against the latter, much less as against the income tenant his successor, fixtures which have remained dissevered after the expiration of his term in any case where that expiration has been occasioned through his act or with his knowledge (Weeton v. Woodcock).

(2.) That in actions by the outgone tenant against an income one (such as were the actions in Roffey v. Henderson and Leader v. Homewood), the outgone tenant cannot recover fixtures against the income tenant to the prejudice of the latter in cases where the articles (whether they be fixtures proper or simple chattels) have remained unsevered after the expiration of the full period of the tenancy, in any case at least where the income tenant had no notice of the outgone tenant's right or claim (Roffey v. Henderson), or, but in respect alone of fixtures properly so called, in cases even where the income tenant (as was the case in Leader v. Homewood) had full notice of such right or claim, the equity of notice in these latter cases not being sufficient to rebut the conclusiveness of the legal presumption to the contrary, although doubtless in this latter class of cases, the outgone tenant may upon effecting either a peaceable entry (if he can), or a legal entry (if need be), remove all such loose goods, and chattels, and severed fixtures as have remained upon the land, his late demise. For it seems that in respect of all these last mentioned articles, the legal presumption of their abandonment for his landlord's use does not arise, and if the landlord (or his income tenant) should convert them in any way, he will be liable as for a tortious conversion of them, and his only safety, therefore, is to put the articles in question in the street, or in the king's highway, and in that manner by a somewhat harsh yet necessary act to invoke the law for his protection and relief. For it seems that the retention of the articles with knowledge is always critical to the income tenant, as it had nearly proved in the case of Roffey v. Henderson, and would have proved in that case but for the difficulty of bringing home conversion upon him, and but for the technical insufficiency of the pleadings, which enabled him to escape.

It appears, therefore, as a result of the comparison of these four cases, taken in connection with the preceding portions of this article, that there is a regular gradation among fixtures, using that word in its widest sense, in respect, at least, of their after-removability or after non-removability by an outgone tenant, and that that gradation is threefold, namely:—

(1.) Fixtures of the old agricultural sort which, instantly they are annexed, are indefeasibly annexed, and with regard to which the presumption of their after-non-removability is absolute or conclusive from the first.

(2.) Fixtures of the modern sort (whether agricultural, trade-proper, or domestic) which are only defeasibly annexed during all the period of the tenancy, and with regard to which the presumption of their after-non-removability is rebuttable during all the period of the tenancy, becoming conclusive only when, and not until, the tenancy, and what may, and has, been called the reasonable "excrescence"* of it, have expired; and for the matter of the after-non-removability of these fixtures, it matters not how slightly they are annexed, provided they are to some degree annexed.

(3.) Fixtures improperly so called, which visibly are not annexed even in the slightest measure, whether defeasibly or indefeasibly, actually or constructively, to the land, and with regard to which the presumption of their abandonment by the tenant does not arise at all from the mere circumstance, at least, of their non-removal by him within the period of the tenancy, and its excrescence, or indeed (as it rather appears) within any period, however long, after the expiration of the tenancy.

Or, to express the same result in other words, and more briefly,—It appears, that with regard to the question of the after-removability or after-non-removability of fixtures by an outgone tenant, there is a regular gradation of presumptions from the absolutely and instantly conclusive presumption of after-non-removability which prevails in respect of the strictly agricultural class of fixtures, through the relatively and terminably rebuttable presumption of removability which prevails in respect of our first subdivision of the modern class of fixtures (whether of the mixed agricultural, of the trade proper, or of the domestic or ornamental species), downwards to the absolutely conclusive presumption of after-removability which prevails in respect of the second subdivision of the modern class. And it appears, therefore, that trover will always, under all circumstances, lie for fixtures of this second subdivision (Davis v. Jones, supra, et passim,) and will lie under special circumstances for fixtures of the former subdivision (Penton v. Robart, supra, et passim) of the modern class, but will not lie for this latter species of fixtures where the circumstances of the case are not exceptional but usual (Lee v. Risdon, supra, et passim), and will in no case lie for fixtures of the old agricultural class, which are either strictly agricultural, or barely necessary and complemental. And we have seen, accordingly, that the dispute (when any dispute arises) regarding the after-removability of fixtures centres really in this preliminary question, namely: What is the character of the particular fixtures, or of some of them? But this question, we submit, can only be safely and confidently answered by the application of those principles which we have attempted in this article to evolve and to elucidate.

In finally leaving this subject, we propose to give one last consideration to the case of Dean v. Allalley (3 Esp., 11, et supra), decided in 1799, and to compare it with, and justify it by, the cases of West v. Blakeway (2 M. and Gr., 729), decided in 1841, and Budder v. Trinidad Petroleum Company (17 W.R., 153), decided in 1869; these two latter cases seeming to be contradictory to the former and earlier one, and yet being readily reconcilable with it. Their reconciliation will go far, we think, to justify the historical method we have adopted, besides also recommending to practical lawyers the views herein expressed; for although that method and those views may seem either to be inapplicable to the cases commonly arising, or to be rather philosophical and subtle than correct, yet a familiarity with the method will be found to make it practically serviceable, and an acquaintance with those views, and with the manner of their evolution, is indispensable to every one who seeks to fully understand the decisions of our English judges, who habitually veil, under a most deceptive simplicity of language and of style, the highly abstract principles, and the elaborate method, underlying and moulding their decisions.

The case of Dean v. Allalley need not for the purpose of this comparison be more accurately set forth than it is already set forth on page 20 supra.

The facts of the case of West v. Blakeway were these—The plaintiff's testator was lessee for years of certain tenements, and granted an underlease of the same tenements, or of part of them, to the defendant, who, on his part, covenanted to repair the premises demised to him, and all erections and improvements which should be erected or made upon the same during the term of his underlease, and at the end, or other the determination of such term, to peaceably yield up to the testator, his executors, administrators, or assigns, the demised premises, and all such future buildings and improvements, together with the several fixtures enumerated in a schedule, and together also with all wainscots, &c., &c., and other things fixed or fastened, or which during the term of the said underlease might be erected, or set up, in or upon, or affixed or fastened to, the demised premises, or any part thereof.

The plaintiff brought the present action against the defendant for an alleged breach of his covenant to repair, and to leave the demised premises, and the future buildings, and improvements thereon, in repair, and for that he suffered and permitted a certain erection and improvement, to wit, a certain greenhouse, which, during the term of the said underlease, had been erected upon the demised premises, to be pulled down and prostrated, and the materials thereof to be wholly removed from off the premises, contrary to the form and effect of his said covenant.

The plaintiff appears to have recovered damages for the non-repair almost as a matter of course, the disputed part of his case being the alleged tortious removal of the greenhouse. Now, in respect of this greenhouse, it appeared that defendant (being himself an under-lessee) had underlet the premises to X, and X had underlet them to Y, and Y to Z, and that Z, or some still remoter under-lessee of the premises, had erected the greenhouse in question, having first had some correspondence with the plaintiff's testator about it, and, in the course of it, having received from the latter a letter which Z interpreted as a license to put up, and afterwards, at pleasure, to remove the said greenhouse.

The greenhouse was built of wood on a frame, and rested on a plank of wood (called a plate), which was laid upon mortar placed in the indents of a dwarf wall, which Z had erected for the front of the greenhouse, the sides consisting apparently of similar walls also erected by Z, and the back being formed by an old wall.

Z removed this greenhouse before the expiration of his term, leaving the walls and ground flues, and doing no injury to the premises.

Chief Justice Tindall left it to the jury to say, whether the greenhouse was an erection or improvement within the meaning of the covenant, and whether the plaintiff's testator had assented to Z's claim to remove it. The jury found for the defendant, and on a subsequent day, upon the hearing of a rule for judgment non obstante veredicto obtained by the plaintiff, Chief Justice Tindall reversed the finding of the jury upon the merely technical ground, however, that the informal letter of licence, not being under seal, could not discharge an obligation contracted by deed under seal, although if the lessor (the plaintiff's testator) had himself occasioned the breach, he could not (neither could his executor) have taken advantage of it; and with respect to the other point, the judges of the Common Pleas were unanimously of opinion, that the greenhouse came within the description "erections and improvements" contained in the covenant, a description which they thought had been purposely adopted to exclude all question of fixture or no fixture.

Now, surely the mere statement of this case in its particular circumstances effectually removes and dispels the objection that it is contradictory to the spirit of the decision of Lord Kenyon in Dean v. Alialley, or to the spirit of the dictum of the same judge in Penton v. Robart, supra. Moreover, a further reason for regarding it as entirely reconcilable, both with that dictum and with that decision, will be given infra at the conclusion of our statement of the next and only remaining case, that of Bidder v. Trinidad Petroleum Company.

Of this last mentioned case, the facts were these:—

X (who was an oil-refiner) was lessee of premises at North Woolwich for a term of ninety-nine years, from December 25, 1862, subject to certain covenants, the purport of which were:—

(1.) To complete certain partially erected buildings, and to erect certain other buildings in a substantial manner, and at a cost altogether of not less than 2500*l*.

(2.) To keep in repair, and at the end of the term to deliver up, the same, together with all the doors, wainscots, dressers, drawers, locks, keys, bolts, bars, staples, hinges, hearths, chimney-pieces, mantel-pieces, foot, paces, slabs, wings, window-sashes, shutters, partitions, pumps, pipes, cisterns, and other things which then were or at any time should be fixed or fastened to the freehold of the said premises or belonging thereto.

The defendants (who were an oil refining company) became entitled at a date subsequent to August 23, 1865, to the said premises for the residue of the term then remaining therein, and subject to the same or the like covenants, and the plaintiff at a still more subsequent date purchased the freehold interest therein subject to the lease.

The company's business proving unsuccessful, they attempted to sell their interest in the lease, and did actually sell some of the fixtures, in particular, "some boilers fitted with pumps and supported with brickwork," also other machinery fitted up in like manner, the removal of which was impossible without displacing the brickwork, and otherwise dismantling parts of the buildings.

The plaintiff accordingly applied for and obtained an injunction against the removal of these particular fixtures; and at the hearing, upon motion for a decree, the Master of the Rolls delivered judgment to the following effect:—

"It is admitted by the plaintiff that the fixtures in dispute are trade fixtures, and that as such they are removable by the company, unless the company have contracted themselves out of their rights. The question turns upon the construction of a lease. [His Lordship then pointed out several expressions in the lease which he said were adverse to the company's claim to remove the articles in question, and then continued] These are, moreover, the things which the company has undertaken to leave in repair at the end of the term. In my opinion, the company is not entitled to remove these articles. The question is one of construction entirely, and not of Common Law."

Now, clearly, this case of Bidder v. The Company is antagonistic to that of Dean v. Allalley, for Lord Kenyon refused to regard the question involved in the latter case as one of construction merely, and regarded it rather as one of Common Law, doing even an apparent violence to the verbal or literal interpretation in his determination to vindicate the rights of trade as existing at Common Law. And yet the reconciliation of the two cases does not seem to be far to seek. Let it be considered merely that a space of seventy years separates the two decisions, and that those years have been years in which trade has not only been the pillar of the state, but the all in all of it, in which, therefore, (and during the latter part of it especially) the question of the rights and claims of trade have been expressly brought before, and kept before, the mind of the conveyancer and draftsman, whereas, at the date of the conveyance in Dean v. Allalley, the interests of land in its simple capacity of land were as yet exclusively considered, and those of trade were not as yet so much as once regarded, or if regarded, regarded so indistinctly as not to be provided for. And in this way, the Common Law, not having been purposely shut out, had room to enter in these olden times; but it is all the other way in these modern times, as the painful enumeration of particulars in the covenant we have set forth in Bidder v. The Company peculiarly shews; for there, in truth, as Lord Romilly observed, the company had contracted away their rights at Common Law. This explanation is also applicable to the case of West v. Blakeway, supra. And in this way, and from these three cases, we find that contrary and seeming contradictory cases may be consentient, when viewed from the different standpoint which time or other circumstance recommends or necessitates—a crowning vindication of the value of our historical method of research.

"Now for the Laws of England (if I shall speak my opinion of them "without partiality either to my profession or country), for the matter and "nature of them, I hold them wise, just and moderate laws: they give to God, "they give to Cæsar, they give to the subject what appertaineth. It is true "they are as mixt as our language, compounded of British, Saxon, Danish, "Norman customs. And surely as our language is thereby so much the richer, "so our laws are likewise by that mixture the more complete."—LORD BACON.

Stephen's Blackstone's Commentaries.—Sixth Edition.

4 vols. 8vo., £4:4s. cloth.

MR. SERJEANT STEPHEN'S NEW COMMENTARIES ON THE LAWS OF ENGLAND, partly founded on Blackstone. The Sixth Edition, by JAMES STEPHEN, LL.D., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law, formerly Recorder of Poole, and late Professor of English Law at King's College, London.

"It would be impossible, without entering minutely into details, to notice at any length this most valuable work. It is one which cannot be too highly recommended, not only to the profession but to the general public. It is a great mistake to act upon the notion that the study of the law is a matter of interest to lawyers only. Now there is no work which gives a summary of the English law at once so exhaustive and intelligible to the general reader as this publication of Dr. Stephen. He has incorporated into it all those portions of Blackstone's great work which would at the present day be useful to the reader." Law Magazine.

"To redeem Blackstone from oblivion, it became necessary that his work should be edited by a lawyer as able and a scholar as graceful as Blackstone himself. Mr. Serjeant Stephen, more than twenty years ago, conceived the happy thought of introducing the necessary alterations into the text itself, and, as he says in his preface, 'interweave his own composition with it as freely as the purpose of general improvement it might seem to require.' The first edition was favorably received, acknowledged at once as an able reproduction of an invaluable treatise on English law, and has since passed rapidly through successive editions, till it has become the acknowledged students' text book, and is accepted by the critics as a standard work. Mr. James Stephen, a no less distinguished and painstaking legal writer than his father, has with equal skill and research, superintended the later editions, made the amendments rendered necessary by alterations in the law, and incorporated and commented upon recent statutes, judgments and decisions with as good an arrangement, as bold a grasp, and with as much felicity of style, adapted to and reading smoothly with that portion of Blackstone's text which still remains, as his predecessor in the same path; and the four volumes now published may be safely regarded as a full exposition and a sound authority on English law to the present time."—Law Journal.

"This new edition of the well known Stephen's Commentaries deserves a cordial welcome, for few years have been more eventful in legislation than those which have passed since the publication of the fifth edition. The skill with which the new matter is incorporated with the old is particularly remarkable, and in spite of the incongruity of the materials, and the threefold authorship of Blackstone, Serjeant Stephen, and the present editor, the result is perfectly homogenous and satisfactory. Indeed the 'noting up' appears to have been done throughout with much ingenuity and industry, and the alterations, great and small, to have been made with excellent judgment. We have no doubt that the work will in its most recent shape retain all its original popularity. We very sincerely recommend this standard text book to all members of the profession. To the student it is simply invaluable, but it is also a useful companion to the most experienced lawyer."—Solicitors' Journal.

"The popular notion of the study of law is, that it is dry. No person who reads these Commentaries will call it so. It is a fascinating book. After six editions, it is impossible to say anything new of a standard work like this. We can but repeat that Stephen's Blackstone is indispensable, not to the law student alone, but to all who take part in public affairs, and especially to magistrates, who ought to be examined in it before they are permitted to sit upon the bench. Nay, it may be affirmed that no gentleman can be considered properly educated unless he has acquired so much knowledge of the law of England as is contained in Blackstone noted up by Stephen."—Law Times.

"How careful Mr. James Stephen, the present able editor, is to continue this work may by reference be ascertained. Mr. Serjeant Stephen, by his great ability, by his unwearied industry, his simplicity and clearness of diction has made himself the first tutor to English law students. With a knowledge of the existence of these Commentaries, the student need not ask, with what work am I to commence my legal studies? Here he will find every branch of English law ably treated on. Not only is the work an essential to the beginner, but it will be found of the greatest use at all times, as well after as before call or admission. Any praise on our part of such a work is wholly unnecessary; as we have before remarked, we feel assured we need do nothing more than announce a new edition, to cause an eager demand amongst all law students, and indeed amongst every one wishing to gain an insight into the laws of his country."—Law Examination Reporter.

"A very valuable feature is the reference made to the cases on each point. This constitutes the work a law library on a small scale. It is a book which is indispensable to every student of the law, whilst practitioners will find it to their advantage to consult it frequently, since they will find therein the law laid down scientifically, concisely, and, above all, accurately."—Irish Law Times.

Questions on Stephen's Blackstone.

Shelford's Law of Railways.—Fourth Edition by Glen.

In 2 thick vols. royal 8vo., 63*s.* cloth.

SHELFORD'S LAW of RAILWAYS; containing the whole of the Statute Law for the Regulation of Railways in England, Scotland and Ireland: with copious Notes of Decided Cases upon the Statutes, Introduction to the Law of Railways, and Appendix of Official Documents. Fourth Edition. By WILLIAM CUNNINGHAM GLEN, Barrister-at-Law, Author of the "Law of Highways," "Law of Public Health and Local Government," &c.

From the LAW MAGAZINE.

"Though we have not had the opportunity of going conscientiously through the whole of this elaborate compilation, we have been able to devote enough time to it to be able to speak in the highest terms of the judgment and ability with which it has been prepared. Its execution quite justifies the reputation which Mr. Glen has already acquired as a legal writer, and proves that no one could have been more properly singled out for the duty he has so well discharged. The work must take its unquestionable position as the leading Manual of the Railway Law of Great Britain. The cases seem to have been examined, and their effect to be stated with much care and accuracy, and no channel from which information could be gained has been neglected. Mr. Glen, indeed, seems to be saturated with knowledge of his subject. The value of the work is greatly increased by a number of supplemental decisions, which give all the cases up to the time of publication, and by an index which appears to be thoroughly exhaustive."

From the LAW TIMES.

"Mr. Glen has done wisely in preserving that reputation, and, as far as possible, the text of Shelford—though very extensive alterations and additions have been required, but he has a claim of his own. He is a worthy successor of the original author, and possesses much of the same industry, skill in arrangement and astuteness in enumerating the points really decided by cited cases. But we have said enough of a work already so well known. It will have a place not in the library of the lawyer alone. It is a book which every railway office should keep on its shelf for reference."

From the LAW JOURNAL.

"Mr. Glen has modestly founded his work as a superstructure on that of Mr. Leonard Shelford, but he has certainly claims to publish it as a purely independent composition. The toil has been as great, and the reward ought to be as complete, as if Mr. Glen had disregarded all his predecessors in the production of treatises on railway law. Since the year 1864 he has been unceasingly engaged in collecting materials, and though he has been ready for the printer for some time, and has delayed the appearance of the volumes in the expectation of legislative changes in railway law, yet he has expended full five years of care and attention on his work. Let us hope that he will have no cause to think his labour has been in vain. At any rate we may venture to predict that Mr. Cunningham Glen's edition of Shelford on Railways will be the standard work of our day in that department of law."

From the JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

"Far be it from us to undervalue Mr. Shelford's labours, or to disparage his merits. But we may nevertheless be permitted to observe that what has hitherto been consider d as the 'best work on the subject' (Shelford) has been immeasurably improved by the application of Mr. Glen's diligence and learning. Sufficient, however, has been done to show that it is in every respect worthy of the reputation which the work has always enjoyed. We feel little doubt that the credit of that work will be greatly increased by Mr. Glen's instrumentality, and that not only will he have ably maintained its reputation by his successful exertions, but that he will have added materially to it."

From the SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

"The practitioner will find here collected together all the enactments bearing on every possible subject which may come before him in connection with railways or railway travelling. Whatever questions may arise the lawyer who has this book upon his shelves, may say to himself 'If there has been any legislation at all connected with this branch of the subject I shall at once find it in Shelford;' and it needs not to be said that on this account the book will be a very 'comfortable' one to possess. The collection is equally exhaustive in the matter of rules, orders, precedents and documents of official authority. To sum up our review; as a collection of statutes and general information the work will prove extremely useful, because in these respects it is so perfectly exhaustive."

Coote's Probate Court Practice.—Sixth Edition.

THE PRACTICE of the COURT of PROBATE in COMMON FORM BUSINESS. By HENRY CHARLES COOTE, F.S.A., Proctor in Doctors' Commons, &c. Also a Treatise on the Practice of the Court in Contentious Business. By THOMAS H. TRISTRAM, D.C.L., Advocate in Doctors' Commons, and of the Inner Temple. Sixth Edition, with great Additions, and including all the Statutes, Rules, Orders, &c., to the present Time; together with a Collection of Original Forms and Bills of Costs.

"In 1858 Mr. Coote published a first attempt to explain the principles which were to regulate the Common Form Practice of the then new Court of Probate. Very welcome, indeed, therefore, was his opportune book of practice, and its utility has been significantly proved by the fact that we have the sixth edition now before us bound up with Dr. Tristram's treatise on the Practice of the Court of Probate in Contentious Business."—Law Magazine.

"A book of practice that has arrived at a sixth edition needs no praise. The fact itself is the best certificate of worth; for practitioners would not have continued to use it if it had not been found entirely adapted for their requirements. Of course this has followed the course of all law books and grown in bulk with each successive edition, as new statutes, new rules of practice, and new decisions accumulate year by year. But the authors have not been content with mere addition; they have performed diligently the no less important work of paring down redundancies and excising the law that has become extinct through subsequent changes. It is the book on its subject, and that is the highest praise that can be given to it."—Law Times.

"Every year the legal arena of probate practice extends itself, and the business which was up to the end of the year 1857 a monopoly in the hands of the ancient proctors has now become the common property of the profession. It is no marvel, then, that the book bef re us has in twelve years run through five editions, and that the new year of 1871 ushers in the sixth. Neither the authors nor the publishers would care to deny, that this substantial success is due, in a great measure, to the pressing need that has existed for a guide to probate practice: but we may also venture to declare, that the success of the work has been brought about as much by its own intrinsic excellence as by the great demand for a work of the kind. Coote's 'Probate Practice' has been the standard work for twelve years, and we see no reason to doubt that it will maintain its present position for many years to come."—Law Journal.

Shelford's Companies.—2nd Edit. by Pitcairn and Latham.

SHELFORD'S LAW OF JOINT STOCK COMPANIES; containing a Digest of the Case Law on that subject; the Companies Acts, 1862, 1867, and other Acts relating to Joint Stock Companies; the Orders made under those Acts to regulate Proceedings in the Court of Chancery and County Courts, and Notes of all Cases interpreting the above Acts and Orders. Second Edition, much enlarged, and bringing the Statutes and Cases down to the date of publication. By DAVID PITCAIRN, M.A., Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford, and of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law; and FRANCIS LAW LATHAM, B.A., Oxon, of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, author of "A Treatise on the Law of Window Lights."

"We may at once state that, in our opinion, the merits of the work are very great, and we confidently expect that it will be at least for the present the standard manual of joint stock company law. That great learning and research have been expended by Mr. Pitcairn no one can doubt who reads only a few pages of the book; the result of each case which has any bearing upon the subject under discussion is very lucidly and accurately stated. We heartily congratulate him on the appearance of this work, for wh ch we anticipate a great success. There is hardly any portion of the law at the present day so important as that which relates to joint stock companies, and that this work will be the standard authority on the subject we have not the shadow of a doubt."—Law Journal.

"After a careful examination of this work we are bound to say that we know of no other which surpasses it in two all-important attributes of a law book: first, a clear conception on the part of the author of what he intends to do and how he intends to treat his subject; and secondly, a consistent, laborious and intelligent adherence to his proposed order and method. All decisions are noted and epitomised in their proper places, the practice-decisions in the notes to Acts and Rules, and the remainder in the introductory account or digest. In the digest Mr. Pitcairn goes into everything with original research, and nothing seems to escape him. It is enough for us that Mr. Pitcairn's performance is able and exhaustive. Nothing is omitted, and everything is noted at the proper place. In conclusion we have great pleasure in recommending this edition to the practitioner. Whoever possesses it, and keeps it noted up, will be armed on all parts and points of the law of joint stock companies."—Solicitors' Journal.

"Although nominally a second edition of Mr. Shelford a treatise, it is in reality an original work, the form and arrangement adopted by Mr. Shelford have been changed and, we think, improved by Mr. Pitcairn. A full and accurate index also adds to the value of the work, the merits of which, we can have no doubt, will be fully recognized by the profession."—Law Magazine.

"This book has always been the vade mecum on company law, and will, apparently, long continue to occupy that position. It is perhaps even more useful to the legal practitioner than to the man of business, but still it is the best source of information to which the latter can go."—Financier and Money Market Review.

Fisher's General Law of Mortgage.—Second Edition.

Two vols. royal 8vo., 55*s.* cloth.

THE LAW of MORTGAGE, and other Securities upon Property. By WILLIAM RICHARD FISHER, of Lincoln's Inn, Esq., Barrister at Law. Second Edition, very considerably enlarged.

"For a length of time it has been received as the best text book on the law of mortgages, and it has recently received the honours of a second edition. We have never been niggards towards Mr. Fisher's very laborious, learned and useful treatise, and we still see no reason to retract those commendations or to reduce their measure. His book thoroughly deserves the character it has won of being the only good and complete repertory we have of the law of mortgages, and other securities upon property."—Law Magazine.

"The second edition of this book, comprised in two volumes of royal octavo, has little beyond its paternity to identify it with the original volume which appeared in 1856. If we speak of the author's first essay as merely tentative and meagre and partial, it is only to draw particular attention to the very complete arrangement and copious detail of the edition now before the public . . . . . and we doubt not that the excellence of the work will receive its due appreciation at the hands of the profession. A word in conclusion is due to the clearness and simplicity which pervades Mr. Fisher's writing. If his language is too often bold and devoid of grace it is never obscure, and we think that the absence of attractive composition will not in these days be accounted a demerit in a treatise designed solely for professional purposes, which possesses the essential qualities of accurate learning and lucid arrangement."—Law Journal.

"The labour bestowed upon it by Mr. Fisher will be best understood by this fact. The mere list of cases cited in the text fills forty-three pages in double columns, and the list of statutes and orders cited occupies fifteen pages. We conclude by commending this work equally to the practitioner and the student; it will be invaluable to the former for reference, to the latter for reading and digesting."—Law Times.

Coote's Admiralty Practice.—Second Edition.

8vo., 16*s.* cloth.

THE PRACTICE of the HIGH COURT of ADMIRALTY of ENGLAND: also the Practice of the Judicial Committee of Her Majesty's Most Honorable Privy Council in Admiralty Appeals, with Forms and Bills of Costs. By HENRY CHARLES COOTE, F.S.A., one of the Examiners of the High Court of Admiralty, Author of "The Practice of the Court of Probate," &c. Second Edition, almost entirely re-written, with a Supplement giving the County Courts Jurisdiction and Practice in Admiralty, the Act of 1868, Rules, Orders, &c.

THE SUPPLEMENT containing the COUNTY COURT PRACTICE IN ADMIRALTY is complete in itself and may be had separately, 2s. sewed.

 This work contains every Common Form in use by the Practitioner in Admiralty, as well as every description of Bill of Costs in that Court, a feature possessed by no other work on the Practice in Admiralty.

"Mr. Coote, being an Examiner of the Court, may be considered as an authoritative exponent of the points of which he treats. His treatise is, substantially considered, everything that can be desired to the practitioner."—Law Magazine.

"The book before us is a second and enlarged edition of a work on the Practice of the Admiralty Court, written by the author some ten years ago. It is, however, a great improvement on its predecessor, being much fuller and more systematically arranged, and containing greater facilities for reference. The first part of the book is a treatise on the practice of the Court, which appears to us to be very carefully done, and to go thoroughly into the subject. The second part is a similar treatise on the practice of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Admiralty matters, written on the same system as the former part. The appendix contains a large number of common forms and precedents of pleadings used in the Court of Admiralty, together with bills of costs. Altogether Mr. Coote has done his work very carefully and completely, and we think his labours will be duly appreciated by Admiralty practitioners."—Solicitors' Journal.

"The first edition of this excellent work was produced for the purpose of illustrating the practice of the High Court of Admiralty, just then subordinated to the 'Rules of 1859' drawn up by the late distinguished judge. Since then several important changes have been carried out, both in the matter of an extended jurisdiction and of practice. These changes it has been Mr. Coote's object to incorporate in the present edition of his work. In addition he has increased the utility of his book by a chapter on the practice of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Admiralty Appeals, and by a copious set of Admiralty precedents, in which it is the author's hope and belief that no necessary common form has been omitted. The present edition appears very seasonably."—Shipping and Mercantile Gazette.

"Mr. Coote has the great advantage of experience; he has long been a practitioner in the court as a proctor; he is consequently familiar with those minutiæ of practice which mark the distinction between the student and the practical man.

"Mr. Coote is a successful writer upon the Practice of the Probate and the Admiralty Courts. His book on the former has reached a fifth edition, and the volume before us is a second edition."—Law Times.

Hunt's Boundaries, Fences and Foreshores.—2nd Edit.

Post 8vo., 12*s.* cloth.

A TREATISE on the LAW relating to BOUNDARIES and FENCES and to the Rights of Property on the Sea Shore and in the Beds of Public Rivers and other Waters. Second Edition. By ARTHUR JOSEPH HUNT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"It speaks well for this book that it has so soon passed into a second edition. That its utility has been appreciated is shown by its success. Mr. Hunt has availed himself of the opportunity of a second edition to note up all the cases to this time, and to extend considerably some of the chapters, especially that which treats of rights of property on the sea shore and the subjects of sea walls and commissions of sewers."—Law Times.

"There are few more fertile sources of litigation than those dealt with in Mr. Hunt's valuable book. It is sufficient here to say that the volume ought to have a larger circulation than ordinarily belongs to law books, that it ought to be found in every country gentleman's library, that the cases are brought down to the latest date, and that it is carefully prepared, clearly written, and well edited."—Law Magazine.

"Mr. Hunt chose a good subject for a separate treatise on Boundaries and Fences and Rights to the Seashore, and we are not surprised to find that a second edition of his book has been called for. The present edition contains much new matter. The chapter especially which treats on rights of property on the seashore, which has been greatly extended. Additions have been also made to the chapters relating to the fencing of the property of mine owners and railway companies. All the cases which have been decided since the work first appeared have been introduced in their proper places. Thus it will be seen this new edition has a considerably enhanced value."—Solicitors' Journal.

Ortolan's Roman Law, translated by Prichard & Nasmith.

8vo., 28*s.* cloth.

THE HISTORY of ROMAN LAW, from the Text of Ortolan's Histoire de la Législation Romaine et Généralisation du Droit (Edition of 1870). Translated, with the Author's permission, and Supplemented by a Chronometrical Chart of Roman History. By ILTUDUS T. PRICHARD, Esq., F.S.S., and DAVID NASMITH, LL.B., Barristers at Law.

"We know of no work, which, in our opinion, exhibits so perfect a model of what a text-book ought to be. Of the translation before us, it is enough to say, that it is a faithful representation of the original."—Law Magazine.

"This translation, from its great merit, deserves a warm reception from all who desire to be acquainted with the history and elements of Roman law, or have its interests as a necessary part of sound legal education at heart. With regard to that great work it is enough to say, that English writers have been continually in the habit of doing piecemeal what Messrs. Prichard and Nasmith have done wholesale. Hitherto we have had but gold-dust from the mine; now we are fortunate in obtaining a nugget. Mr. Nasmith is already known as the designer of a chart of the history of England, which has been generally approved, and bids fairly for extensive adoption."—Law Journal.

"We are extremely glad to welcome the appearance of a translation of any of the works of M. Ortolan, and the history and generalization of Roman law, which are now presented to us in English, are perhaps the most useful books that could be offered at the present time to students of the Roman law. The utility of Roman law, as an instrument of legal education, is now generally admitted. The English of the book is unusually free from foreign idioms which so often disfigure translations. The book itself we strongly recommend to all who are interested in Roman law, jurisprudence or history, and who are not sufficiently familiar with French, to be able to read the original with ease."—Solicitors' Journal.

Tomkins' Institutes of Roman Law.

Part I. royal 8vo. (to be completed in Three Parts) 12*s.* cloth.

THE INSTITUTES OF THE ROMAN LAW. PART I. The Sources of the Roman Law and its external History to the decline of the Eastern and Western Empires. By FREDERICK J. TOMKINS, M.A., D.C.L., Barrister-at-Law, of Lincoln's Inn.

"This work promises to be an important and valuable contribution to the study of the Roman Law."—Law Magazine.

"Of all the works on the Roman Law we believe this will be the best suited to law students. We welcome the book of Mr. Tomkins. It is calculated to promote the study of Roman Law; and both at the Universities and in the Inns of Court it is a work which may safely and beneficially be employed as a text book."—Law Times.

"This work is pronounced by its author to be strictly elementary. But in regard to the labour bestowed, the research exercised, and the materials brought together, it seems to deserve a more ambitious title than that of an elementary treatise. The chapter on legal instruction, detailing the systems of legal education pursued in the various epochs of Rome, reflects great credit on the author, and so far as we know is purely original."—Law Journal.

"We know of no other book in which anything like the same amount of information can be acquired with the same ease. If the second part is as well executed as the first and bears a due proportion to it, we think the work bids fair to become the standard text book for English students."—Solicitors' Journal.

"The study of this volume is necessary to all who wish to be properly acquainted with the history and literature of the Roman law."—Irish Law Times.

"Mr. Tomkins has produced a book that was long needed."—Law Examination Reporter

Saunders' Law of Negligence.

1 vol., post 8vo., 9*s.* cloth.

A TREATISE on the LAW applicable to NEGLIGENCE. By THOMAS W. SAUNDERS, Esq., Barrister at Law, Recorder of Bath.

"The book is admirable; while small in bulk, it contains everything that is necessary, and its arrangement is such that one can readily refer to it. Amongst those who have done good service, Mr. Saunders will find a place."—Law Magazine.

"In the useful little volume now before us he has gathered the whole law of negligence. All his works are distinguished by painstaking and accuracy. This one is no exception; and the subject, which is of very extensive interest, will insure for it a cordial welcome from the profession."—Law Times.

"The references to the cases are given much more fully, and on a more rational system than is common with text book writers. He has a good index; he has produced a work which will facilitate reference to the authorities."—Solicitors' Journal.

"As a work of reference the book will be very welcome in the office of the solicitor or in the chambers of the barrister."—Morning Advertiser.

"A short and clear treatise like the present on the law relating to the subject ought to be welcomed. It is a moderate size volume, and makes references to all the authorities on the question easy."—Standard.

"It is a great advantage to the legal profession to find all the law of negligence collected and arranged in a manual of reasonable size. Such is Mr. Saunders' book."—Public Opinion

"A serviceable and seasonable treatise on the law of negligence, by Thomas W. Saunders, Esq., Recorder of Bath."—Telegraph.

"A careful treatise on a branch of law which is daily acquiring importance. The manual before us is a useful treatise."—Echo.

Ingram's Law of Compensation.—2nd Edit. by Elmes.

Post 8vo., 12*s.* cloth.

COMPENSATION to LAND and HOUSE OWNERS: being a Treatise on the Law of the Compensation for Interests in Lands, &c. payable by Railway and other Public Companies; with an Appendix of Forms and Statutes. By THOMAS DUNBAR INGRAM, of Lincoln's Inn, Esq., Barrister at Law. Second Edition. By J. J. ELMES, of the Inner Temple, Esq., Barrister at Law.

"We say at once that it is a work of great merit. It is a concise, clear and complete exposition of the law of compensation applicable to the owners of real property and railway and other companies."—Law Magazine.

"Whether for companies taking land or holding it, Mr Ingram's volume will be a welcome guide. With this in his hand the legal adviser of a company, or of an owner and occupier whose property is taken, and who demands compensation for it, cannot fail to perform his duty rightly."—Law Times.

"This work appears to be carefully prepared as regards its matter. This edition is a third larger than the first; it contains twice as many cases, and an enlarged index. It was much called for, and doubtless will be found very useful to the practitioner."—Law Magazine, second notice.

Cutler's Law of Naturalization.

12mo., 3*s.* 6*d* cloth.

THE LAW of NATURALIZATION; as Amended by the Acts of 1870. By JOHN CUTLER, B.A., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law, Editor of "Powell's Law of Evidence," &c.

"The author's position as Professor of English Law and Jurisprudence is a guarantee of his legal competence, whilst his literary abilities have enabled him to clothe his legal knowledge in language which laymen can understand without being misled by it."—John Bull.

"Mr. Cutler, in the work before us, lucidly explains the state of the law previous to the recent statute, and shows the alterations produced by it, so that a careful perusal of this book will enable the reader fully to comprehend the present state of the law upon this most important subject."—Justice of the Peace.

"This little work will be found of use to our countrymen resident abroad, as well as to foreigners resident in this country."—Public Opinion.

"The book is a model of what a treatise of its kind should be."—Sunday Times.

"A very convenient hand-book to the law of naturalization, as amended by the Acts of 1870."—Weekly Times.

"To anyone not having much previous acquaintance with the subject, who wishes for a general sketch of the law affecting aliens, as it was, and as it is now, this book will be useful."—Solicitors' Journal.

"It has been carefully compiled, and the authorities referred to are accurately cited."—Pall Mall Gazette.

Brabrook's Co-operative and Provident Societies.

12mo., 6s. cloth.

THE LAW relating to INDUSTRIAL and PROVIDENT SOCIETIES, including the Winding-up Clauses, with a Practical Introduction, Notes, and Model Rules, to which are added the Law of France on the same subject, and Remarks on Trades Unions. By EDWARD W. BRABROOK, F.S.A., of Lincoln's Inn, Esq., Barrister at Law, Assistant Registrar of Friendly Societies in England.

"It may be usefully consulted by practitioners desirous of learning something more upon the subject than is to be found in works on partnership and joint stock companies. The book is thoughtfully written, and we recommend it to those who desire to learn something practical about the work which these societies are meant to do and the way in which it is to be done."—Solicitors' Journal.

"Mr. Brabrook's little work on these societies is opportune, and the statistics and information contained in it are valuable and interesting. There is a chapter devoted to practical advice, in which are contained many valuable and important hints."—Law Magazine.

"Mr. Brabrook brings not merely official knowledge of his legal position as the barrister recently appointed to assist Mr. Tidd Pratt, Registrar of Friendly Societies in England, but the devotion of many years to a practical study of our industrial and provident institutions."—Post

"The author speaks with practical experience and authority."—Observer.

"The clear exposition made by Mr. Brabrook in this volume supplies all the requisite information, and persons interested in the subject will do well to consult its pages."—News of the World.

Rouse's Conveyancer.—3rd Ed. with Supplement to 1871.

Two vols. 8vo., 30*s.* cloth.

The PRACTICAL CONVEYANCER, giving, in a mode combining facility of reference with general utility, upwards of Four Hundred Precedents of Conveyances, Mortgages and Leases, Settlements, and Miscellaneous Forms, with (not in previous editions) the Law and numerous Outline Forms and Clauses of WILLS and Abstracts of Statutes affecting Real Property, Conveyancing Memoranda, &c. By ROLLA ROUSE, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law, Author of "The Practical Man," &c. Third Edition, greatly enlarged. With a Supplement, giving Abstracts of the Statutory Provisions affecting the Practice in Conveyancing, to the end of 1870; and the requisite Alterations in Forms, with some new Forms; and including a full Abstract in numbered Clauses of the Stamp Act, 1870.

THE SUPPLEMENT separately, price 1*s.* 6*d. sewed.*

"The best test of the value of a book written professedly for practical men is the practical one of the number of editions through which it passes. The fact that this well-known work has now reached its third shows that it is considered by those for whose convenience it was written to fulfil its purpose well."—Law Magazine.

"This is the third edition in ten years, a proof that practitioners have used and approved the precedents collected by Mr. Rouse. In this edition, which is greatly enlarged, he has for the first time introduced Precedents of Wills, extending to no less than 116 pages. We can accord unmingled praise to the conveyancing memoranda showing the practical effect of the various statutory provisions in the different parts of a deed. If the two preceding editions have been so well received, the welcome given to this one by the profession will be heartier still."—Law Times.

"So far as a careful perusal of Mr. Rouse's book enables us to judge of its merits, we think that as a collection of precedents of general utility in cases of common occurrence it will be found satisfactorily to stand the application of the test. The draftsman will find in the Practical Conveyancer precedents appropriate to all instruments of common occurrence, and the collection appears to be especially well supplied with those which relate to copyhold estates. In order to avoid useless repetition and also to make the precedents as simple as possible, Mr. Rouse has sketched out a number of outline drafts so as to present to the reader a sort of bird's-eye view of each instrument and show him its form at a glance. Each paragraph in these outline forms refers, by distinguishing letters and numbers, to the clauses in full required to be inserted in the respective parts of the instrument, and which are given in a subsequent part of the work, and thus every precedent in outline is made of itself an index to the clauses which are necessary to complete the draft. In order still further to simplify the arrangement of the work, the author has adopted a plan (which seems to us fully to answer its purpose) of giving the variations which may occur in any instrument according to the natural order of its different parts."—Law Journal.

"That the work has found favor is proved by the fact of our now having to review a third edition. This method of skeleton precedents appears to us to be attended with important advantages. To clerks and other young hands a course of conveyancing under Mr. Rouse's auspices is, we think, calculated to prove very instructive. To the solicitor, especially the country practitioner, who has often to set his clerks to work upon drafts of no particular difficulty to the experienced practitioner, but upon which they the said clerks are not to be quite trusted alone, we think to such gentlemen Mr. Rouse's collection of Precedents is calculated to prove extremely serviceable. We repeat, in conclusion, that solicitors, especially those practising in the country, will find this a useful work."—Solicitors' Journal.

Dixon's Law of Partnership.

1 vol. 8vo., 22*s.* cloth.

A TREATISE on the LAW of PARTNERSHIP. By JOSEPH DIXON, of Lincoln's Inn, Esq., Barrister at Law. Editor of "Lush's Common Law Practice."

"It is with considerable gratification that we find the subject treated by a writer of Mr. Dixon's reputation for learning, accuracy and painstaking. Mr. Lindley's view of the subject is that of a philosophical lawyer, Mr. Dixon's is purely and exclusively practical from beginning to end. We imagine that very few questions are likely to come before the practitioner which Mr. Dixon's book will not be found to solve. Having already passed our opinion on the way in which the work is carried out, we have only to add that the value of the book is very materially increased by an excellent marginal summary, and a very copious index."—Law Magazine and Review.

"Mr. Dixon has done his work well. The book is carefully and usefully prepared."—Solicitors' Journal.

"Mr. Dixon enters into all the conditions of partnerships at common law, and defines the rights of partners among themselves; the rights of the partnership against third persons; the rights of third persons against the partnership; and the rights and liabilities of individuals, not actually partners, but liable to be treated by third persons as partners."—The Times.

"We heartily recommend to practitioners and students Mr. Dixon's treatise as the best exposition of the law we have read, for the arrangement is not only artistic, but conciseness has been studied without sacrifice of clearness. He sets forth the principles upon which the law is based as well as the cases by which its application is shown. Hence it is something more than a digest, which too many law books are not: it is really an essay."—Law Times.

"He has evidently bestowed upon this book the same conscientious labour and painstaking industry for which we had to compliment him some months since when reviewing his edition of Lush's 'Practice of the Superior Courts of Law,' and, as a result, he has produced a clearly written and well arranged manual upon one of the most important branches of our mercantile law."—Law Journal.

"The matter is well arranged and the work is carefully executed."—Athenæum.

Mr. Justice Lush's Common Law Practice.—Third Edition by Dixon.

LUSH'S PRACTICE of the SUPERIOR COURTS of COMMON LAW at WESTMINSTER, in Actions and Proceedings over which they have a common Jurisdiction: with Introductory Treatises respecting Parties to Actions; Attornies and Town Agents, their Qualifications, Rights, Duties, Privileges and Disabilities; the Mode of Suing, whether in Person or by Attorney in Formâ Pauperis, &c. &c. &c.; and an Appendix, containing the authorized Tables of Costs and Fees, Forms of Proceedings and Writs of Execution. Third Edition. By JOSEPH DIXON, of Lincoln's Inn, Esq., Barrister at Law.

"This is an excellent edition of an excellent work. He has effected a most successful 'restoration.' Altogether, both in what he has omitted and what he has added, Mr. Dixon has been guided by sound discretion. We trust that the great and conscientious labours he has undergone will be rewarded. He has striven to make his work 'thorough,' and because he has done so we take pleasure in heartily recommending it to every member of both branches of the profession."—Solicitors' Journal.

"Lush's Practice is what Tidd's Practice was in our days of clerkship, and what Archbold's Practice was in our early professional days—the practice in general use, and the received authority on the subject. It was written by Mr. Lush when he was only a junior rising into fortune and fame His practical knowledge, his clearness and industry, were even then acknowledged, and his name secured for his work an immediate popularity, which experience has confirmed and extended. But the work was, in its turn, productive of considerable advantage to the author, it largely increased the number of his clients. When new editions were called for, Mr. Lush was too occupied with briefs to find time for the preparation of books, and hence the association of his name with that of Mr. Dixon as editor, and by whom the new edition has been produced. The index is very copious and complete. Under Mr. Dixon's care Lush's Practice will not merely maintain, it will largely extend its reputation."—Law Times.

"The profession cannot but welcome with the greatest cordiality and pleasure a third edition of their old and much valued friend 'Lush's Practice of the Superior Courts of Law.' Mr. Dixon, in preparing this edition, has gone back to the original work of Mr. Justice Lush, and, as far as the legislative changes and decisions of the last twenty-five years would allow, reproduced it. This adds greatly to the value of this edition, and at the same time speaks volumes for Mr. Dixon's conscientious labour."—Law Journal.

Clifford and Stephens's Practice of Referees Court, 1871.

Vol. I. and Vol. II. Part I., royal 8vo., 38*s.* cloth.

THE PRACTICE of the COURT of REFEREES on PRIVATE BILLS in PARLIAMENT, with Reports of Cases as to the locus standi of Petitioners during the Sessions 1867-8-9 and 70. By FREDERICK CLIFFORD and PEMBROKE S. STEPHENS, Barristers-at-Law.

"The authors point out in their preface that none of the decisions of 1867 or later years are included in the previous works on the subject. They are accordingly reported in the work before us, arranged in six groups. The history and practice of the subject are detailed tersely and accurately, and in a very intelligible manner, in the treatise. To counsel or agents engaged in parliamentary practice the work will prove extremely serviceable."—Solicitors' Journal.

"The reports, forming the most important part of the volume, are given with fulness and accuracy, so far as we can judge, and are of themselves a sufficient recommendation to the volume."—Law Journal.

VOL. II. PART I., containing the Cases decided during the Session 1870, may be had separately, 10*s. sewed.*

Starkie's Law of Slander and Libel.—3rd Edition.

One thick vol. medium 8vo., 42*s.* cloth.

STARKIE'S TREATISE on the LAW of SLANDER and LIBEL; including MALICIOUS PROSECUTIONS, CONTEMPTS of COURT, &c.; also the Pleading and Evidence, Civil and Criminal, with Forms and Precedents. Third Edition. By H. C. FOLKARD, Barrister-at-Law.

"No one will fail to see that there were ample reasons for a new edition of this valuable work; and upon reference to this edition it will be found that Mr. Folkard has performed his task carefully and well. It is well that such a treatise should have been re-edited, and it is well that it should have been edited by so careful and painstaking a man as Mr. Folkard."—Law Magazine.

"Thirty-nine years have gone by and now Mr. Folkard has brought out a third edition and certainly the first glance of the new book gives the impression of pains unspared. In point of bulk it contains more than twice as much matter as the edition of 1830. With the present volume before them, the law officers of the crown, and lawyers generally, will be saved an infinite amount of labour in search of precedents. No one can say that Mr. Folkard has failed in the full discharge of his onerous duty, and we are sure that he will earn, as he will obtain, the gratitude of the profession."—Law Journal.

"It has been most laboriously executed, and, as far as we have been able to examine, the modern cases, down to the very latest, and to the most obscure, have all been collected, and have, on the whole, been accurately set out. The profession may we think be pretty confident that whatever has been decided upon the law of libel will be found there."—Solicitors' Journal.

"It was requisite that the profession should be supplied with a new edition of this standard work upon the subject, which should bring down the law to the most recent period, and when we state that the present editor has so carefully gathered together all the authorities that he has not even omitted the case of Wason v. Walter, reported in our last number, which will in future be regarded as a leading case, we mention a fact which is a guarantee for the great care which has been devoted to this work. It would be difficult to find any part of his subject which Mr. Folkard has not fully investigated, and the result is a valuable addition to the lawyer's library which for many years has been much needed."—Justice of the Peace.

"This edition is of much greater value than either of the two which preceded it. In conclusion we may do that which is now scarcely necessary, recommend Mr. Folkard's work to the profession and the public. It is, as now edited, very valuable."—Law Times.

Davis's County Courts Practice and Evidence.—Third Edit.

One thick volume, Royal 12mo. 28*s.* cloth.

A MANUAL of the PRACTICE and EVIDENCE in ACTIONS and other PROCEEDINGS in the COUNTY COURTS, including the PRACTICE in BANKRUPTCY, with an Appendix of Statutes and Rules. By JAMES EDWARD DAVIS, of the Middle Temple, Esq., Barrister at Law. Third Edition, considerably enlarged.

 This is the only work on the County Courts which gives Forms of Plaints and treats fully of the Law and Evidence in Actions and other Proceedings in these Courts.

The LAW relating to PUBLIC HEALTH and LOCAL GOVERNMENT, including the Law relating to the Removal of Nuisances injurious to Health, the Prevention of Diseases, and Sewer Authorities; with the Statutes and Cases. By W. CUNNINGHAM GLEN, of the Middle Temple, Esq., Barrister at Law.

Smith's Practice of Conveyancing.

Post 8vo., 6*s.* cloth.

AN ELEMENTARY VIEW of the PRACTICE of CONVEYANCING in SOLICITORS' OFFICES; with an Outline of the Proceedings under the Transfer of Land and Declaration of Title Acts, 1862, for the use of Articled Clerks. By EDMUND SMITH, B.A., late of Pembroke College, Cambridge. Attorney and Solicitor.

Wills on Circumstantial Evidence.—Fourth Edition.

8vo., 10*s.* cloth.

AN ESSAY on the PRINCIPLES of CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE. Illustrated by numerous Cases. By the late WILLIAM WILLS, Esq. Fourth Edition, edited by his Son, ALFRED WILLS, Esq., Barrister at Law.

Powell on Evidence.—Third Edition by Cutler & Griffin.

12mo., 16*s.* cloth.

THE PRINCIPLES and PRACTICE of the LAW of EVIDENCE. By EDMUND POWELL, M.A., of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law. Third Edition by JOHN CUTLER, B.A., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law, Professor of English Law and Jurisprudence, and Professor of Indian Jurisprudence at King's College, London; and EDMUND FULLER GRIFFIN, B.A., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law. To which is added a SUPPLEMENT containing the alterations in the Law of Evidence to Michaelmas, 1869.

The Supplement may be had separately price 1*s.* sewed.

"We have very great pleasure in noticing this edition of a work with which we have long been familiar. It was certainly a good idea to make the book useful to the equity practitioner. It was a still better idea to adapt the Anglo-Indian rules of evidence, which must assist materially those who are studying in England for the Indian bar, or preparing for the Indian civil service. Mr. Cutler, being Professor of Indian Jurisprudence at King's College, has executed this latter branch of the work with the ability which was to be expected from him, and we can heartily recommend this excellent edition of Mr. Powell's book as likely to prove of very wide utility."—Law Times.

"To put before students in an attractive and concise form the principles of the laws of evidence the authors have achieved a success. The treatise before us has with great care and skill incorporated the principles of evidence observed in equity, and also the salient rules adopted in the Anglo-Indian courts. While we think that the sphere of this treatise must be confined to the education of students, we have no hesitation in asserting that within that sphere the book is a great success, and we cordially recommend the volume to students both for the English bar and for the Indian bar. Its simplicity and perspicuity render it also a valuable aid to members of the Indian civil service."—Law Journal.

"This is a new edition of a work which we fancy has scarcely been as well known as it deserves. It has not of course the pretensions to completeness of Mr. Pitt Taylor's book, nor possibly has it so much merit as an original and scientific treatise as Mr. Best's, at the same time it is probably more useful than either for ready reference in court on ordinary points. The present volume is of handy size, is moderately cheap, and its contents are remarkably well arranged, so that anything it contains can be rapidly found. We think this will be enough to make the work useful to practitioners on circuit, at quarter sessions, and especially in county courts where access to a library is not usually to be had and it is inconvenient or impossible to take many or large books. To students and young barristers also the book will be useful, not only for reading at home, as more practical than Best and less detailed than Taylor, but also for taking with them into court."—Solicitors' Journal.

"This is a good edition of a very useful work. The book itself we have always considered as well adapted for the student and convenient for the practitioner. It explains principles clearly, and illustrates them without overloading them by the cases quoted. The work is more practical in its object than that of Mr. Best, and treats the subject in a more succinct manner than Mr. Pitt Taylor. There could be no better introduction to the study of the law of evidence than Mr. Powell's book, whilst it is perfectly suitable for ordinary reference, and the care that has been bestowed on it by the present editors will, we think, considerably enhance its value. The law has been brought down to the close of last year, and the principles of the law of evidence followed by the Court of Chancery have been incorporated in the work, and the rules of evidence adopted by the Anglo-Indian courts have been referred to, the chief part of the Indian Evidence Act being in the appendix. This last feature of the work will render it very valuable for those who are studying for the Indian civil service, and will not be without interest for all who wish to understand thoroughly the principles of the law of evidence."—Law Magazine and Review.

 Although in this work the most important decisions only are quoted, and as a rule but one authority is given for each proposition, yet there are upwards of 400 cases cited therein which do not appear in the table of cases prefixed to the latest edition of "Taylor on Evidence."

Holland on the Form of the Law.

8vo., 7*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

ESSAYS upon the FORM of the LAW. By THOMAS ERSKINE HOLLAND, M.A., Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford, and of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law.

"A work of great ability."—Athenæum.

"Entitled to very high commendation."—Law Times.

"The essays of an author so well qualified to write upon the subject."—Law Journal.

"We can confidently recommend these essays to our readers."—Law Magazine.

"A work in which the whole matter is easily intelligible to the lay as well as the professional public."—Saturday Review.

"Mr. Holland's extremely valuable and ingenious essays."—Spectator.

Wigram on Extrinsic Evidence as to Wills.

Fourth Edition. 8vo., 11*s.* cloth.

AN EXAMINATION OF THE RULES OF LAW respecting the Admission of EXTRINSIC EVIDENCE in Aid of the INTERPRETATION OF WILLS. By the Right Hon. Sir JAMES WIGRAM, Knt. The Fourth Edition, prepared for the press with the sanction of the learned Author, by W. KNOX WIGRAM, M.A., of Lincoln's Inn, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

"In the celebrated treatise of Sir James Wigram, the rules of law are stated, discussed and explained in a manner which has excited the admiration of every judge who has had to consult it."—Lord Kingsdown, in a Privy Council Judgment, July 8th, 1858.

Williams's Common Law Pleading and Practice.

8vo., 12*s.* cloth.

An INTRODUCTION to PRACTICE and PLEADING in the SUPERIOR COURTS of LAW, embracing an outline of the whole proceedings in an Action at Law, on Motion, and at Judges' Chambers; together with the Rules of Pleading and Practice, and Forms of all the principal Proceedings. By WATKIN WILLIAMS, Esq., M.P., of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law.

"For the Student especially the book has features of peculiar value, it is at the same time scientific and practical, and throughout the work there is a judicious union of general principles with a practical treatment of the subject, illustrated by forms and examples of the main proceedings."—Jurist.

Bainbridge's Law of Mines and Minerals.—3rd Edit.

8vo., 30*s.* cloth.

A TREATISE on the LAW of MINES and MINERALS. By WILLIAM BAINBRIDGE, Esq., F.G.S., of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law. Third Edition, carefully revised, and much enlarged by additional matter relating to manorial rights—rights of way and water and other mining easements—the sale of mines and shares—the construction of leases—cost book and general partnerships—injuries from undermining and inundations—barriers and working out of bounds. With an Appendix of Forms and Customs and a Glossary of English Mining Terms.

"When a work has reached three editions, criticism as to its practical value is superfluous. We believe that this work was the first published in England on the special subject of mining law—others have since been published—but we see no reason in looking at the volume before us to believe that it has yet been superseded."—Law Magazine.

"Mr. Bainbridge was we believe the first to collect and publish, in a separate treatise, the Law of Mines and Minerals, and the work was so well done that his volume at once took its place in the law library as the text book on the subject to which it was devoted. This work must be already familiar to all readers whose practice brings them in any manner in connection with mines or mining, and they well know its value. We can only say of this new edition that it is in all respects worthy of its predecessors."—Law Times.

"After an interval of eleven years we have to welcome a new edition of Mr. Bainbridge's work on mines and minerals. It would be entirely superfluous to attempt a general review of a work which has for so long a period occupied the position of the standard work on this important subject. Those only who, by the nature of their practice, have learned to lean upon Mr. Bainbridge as on a solid staff, can appreciate the deep research, the admirable method, and the graceful style of this model treatise. Therefore we are merely reduced to the inquiry, whether the law has, by force of statutes and of judicial decisions, undergone such development, modification, or change since the year 1856 as to justify a new edition? That question may be readily answered in the affirmative, and the additions and corrections made in the volume before us furnish ample evidence of the fact. It may be also stated that this book, being priced at 30*s*, has the exceptional character of being a cheap law publication."—Law Journal.

Field's Table of, and Index to, Indian Statute Law.

Demy 4to., 42*s.* cloth.

A CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE of and INDEX to the INDIAN STATUTE-BOOK from the Year 1834. with a General Introduction to the Statute Law of India. By C. D. FIELD, M.A., LL.D., of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law, and of H.M.'s Bengal Civil Service.

"Mr. Field has produced a work which will be extremely useful, not only to the profession in India, but to those practising in the Privy Council at home."—Solicitors' Journal.

Cutler and Griffin's Indian Criminal Law.

8vo. 6*s.* cloth.

AN ANALYSIS of the INDIAN PENAL CODE (including the Indian Penal Code Amendment Act, 1870), with Notes. By JOHN CUTLER, B.A., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law, Professor of English Law and Jurisprudence, and Professor of Indian Jurisprudence at King's College, London, and EDMUND FULLER GRIFFIN, B.A., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law.

"It may be added that the code is just at at present out of print, so that the production of an analysis at the present moment is especially opportune. Messrs. Cutler and Griffin have produced a useful little book, and produced it at a time when it will be especially useful."—Solicitors' Journal.

"This analysis of the Indian Penal Code seems to have conferred a great boon on the Indian practitioner, and will doubtless be of use to professional men in England. It has a good index."—Law Magazine.

"This is a work intended for students and for practitioners in India. Knowing how well the same authors edited the Indian portion of Powell on Evidence, we should be content to take it on the faith of their reputation only. The mode of analysis is very clear and brings well forward the prominent features of the code."—Law Times.

Davis's Criminal Law Consolidation Acts.

12mo., 10*s.* cloth.

THE NEW CRIMINAL LAW CONSOLIDATION ACTS, 1861; with an Introduction and practical Notes, illustrated by a copious reference to Cases decided by the Court of Criminal Appeal. Together with alphabetical Tables of Offences, as well those punishable upon Summary Conviction as upon Indictment, and including the Offences under the New Bankruptcy Act, so arranged as to present at one view the particular Offence, the Old or New Statute upon which it is founded, and the Limits of Punishment; and a full Index. By JAMES EDWARD DAVIS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Powell's Law of Inland Carriers.—Second Edition.

8vo., 14*s.* cloth.

THE LAW OF INLAND CARRIERS, especially as regulated by the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854. By EDMUND POWELL, Esq., of Lincoln College, Oxon, M.A., and of the Western Circuit, Barrister at Law, Author of "Principles and Practice of the Law of Evidence." Second Edition, almost re-written.

"Mr Powell's writing is singularly precise and condensed, without being at all dry, as those who have read his admirable Book of Evidence will attest. It will be seen, from our outline of the contents, how exhaustively the subject has been treated, and that it is entitled to be, that which it aspires to become, the text book on the Law of Carriers."—Law Times.

"The two chapters on the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1856, are quite new, and the recent cases under the provisions of that statute are analyzed in lucid language."—Law Magazine.

A DIGESTED INDEX to all the REPORTS in the HOUSE of LORDS from the commencement of the Series by Dow, in 1814, to the end of the Eleven Volumes of House of Lords Cases, with references to more recent Decisions. By CHARLES CLARK, of the Middle Temple, Esq., Barrister at Law, Reporter by Appointment to the House of Lords.

"The decisions of the supreme tribunal of this country, however authoritative in themselves, were not, until of late years, at all familiar to the great body of the legal profession; the early reports of them being in the hands of but few persons. In that tribunal, more than in any other, questions can be considered, as they have been, upon purely legal principles, freed from the fetters and obstructions of mere precedent. The acknowledged eminence of the noble and learned persons by whom the decisions have been pronounced, gives them a value beyond their official authoritativeness. It is hoped that this Digest will have the effect of making the profession at large familiarly acquainted with them."—Prefatory Notice.

Barry's Practice of Conveyancing.

8vo., 18*s.* cloth.

A TREATISE on the PRACTICE of CONVEYANCING. By W. WHITTAKER BARRY, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law, late Holder of the Studentship of the Inns of Court, and Author of "A Treatise on the Statutory Jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery."

CHAP. 1. Abstracts of Title.—CHAP. 2. Agreements.—CHAP. 3. Particulars and Conditions of Sale.—CHAP. 4. Copyholds.—CHAP. 5. Covenants.—CHAP. 6. Creditors' Deeds and Arrangements.—CHAP. 7. Preparation of Deeds.—CHAP. 8. On Evidence.—CHAP. 9. Leases.—CHAP. 10. Mortgages.—CHAP. 11. Partnership Deeds and Arrangements.—CHAP. 12. Sales and Purchases.—CHAP. 13. Settlements.—CHAP. 14. Wills.—CHAP. 15. The Land Registry Act, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 53.—CHAP. 16. The Act for obtaining a Declaration of Title, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 67.—INDEX.

"The author of this valuable treatise on conveyancing has most wisely devoted a considerable part of his work to the practical illustration of the working of the recent Statutes on Registration of Title—and for this, as well as for other reasons, we feel bound to strongly recommend it to the practitioner as well as the student. The author has proved himself to be a master of the subject, for he not only gives a most valuable supply of practical suggestions, but criticises them with much ability, and we have no doubt that his criticism will meet with general approval."—Law Magazine.

"The author introduces a work which will be found a very acceptable addition to the law library, and to supply a want which we think has hitherto been felt. It contains, in a concise and readable form, the law relating to almost every point likely to arise in the ordinary every day practice of the conveyancer, with references to the various authorities and statutes to the latest date, and may be described as a manual of practical conveyancing."—Law Journal.

"This treatise supplies a want which has long been felt. There has been no treatise on the Practice of Conveyancing issued for a long time past that is adequate for the present requirements. Mr. Barry's work is essentially what it professes to be, a treatise on the Practice of Conveyancing, in which the theoretical rules of real property law are referred to only for the purpose of elucidating the practice. Mr. Barry appears to have a very accurate insight into the practice in every department of our real property system. Although we cannot boast, like Duval, of having ever read abstracts of title with pleasure, we have certainly read Mr. Barry's chapter on abstracts and numerous other parts of his work with very considerable satisfaction on account of the learning, great familiarity with practice, and power of exposition of its author. The treatise, although capable of compression, is the production of a person of great merit and still greater promise."—Solicitors' Journal.

"The Author's design was to do for the practice of conveyancing what Mr. Joshua Williams has done for its principles, to describe it simply, clearly and succinctly, recollecting that he was only laying the foundation and not crowning the edifice. A work the substance of which is so well known to our readers, needs no recommendation from us, for its merits are patent to all, from personal acquaintance with them. The information that the treatise so much admired may now be had in the more convenient form of a book, will suffice of itself to secure a large and eager demand for it."—Law Times.

"The work is clearly and agreeably written, and ably elucidates the subject in hand."—Justice of the Peace.

"The work is the most important and best treatise on conveyancing that now exists, and the student can have no better authority than Mr. Barry to get himself well up in conveyancing. Nor can the legal practitioner, and especially country solicitors, find a safer book of reference in practice than Mr. Barry's very valuable treatise."—News of the World.

"We must content ourselves with the statement that the present is a work of very great ability. There is no modern work which deals with precisely the same subject, and we have no doubt whatever that this will prove a book of very great value, both to the practitioner and to the student-at-law."—Athenæum.

Hunter's Suit in Equity.—Fifth Edition.

Post 8vo., 10*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

AN ELEMENTARY VIEW of the PROCEEDINGS in a SUIT in EQUITY. With an Appendix of Forms. By SYLVESTER J. HUNTER, B.A., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law. Fifth Edition. By G. W. LAWRANCE, M.A., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law.

"'Hunter's Suit in Equity' is an excellent book for students. It is really an indispensable for the chancery part of the lawyer's education. It is a great excellence of this work, that while making everything clear and giving substantially sufficient information, its writers have been able to strike the happy mean between too great compression and embarrassing exuberance of detail."—Solicitors' Journal.

"We presume that the continued demand for a volume of so essential utility to students of equity, rather than the necessary incorporation of any new matter, has occasioned the publication of a new edition. The alterations and additions to chancery practice and procedure which have been made during the last three years by statute and by general orders of the court are embodied in their proper places in the present edition. In other respects we need pass no encomiums on the work before us, for its standard merit is too well known to require commendation."—Law Journal.

"Changes have compelled the recasting of a considerable portion of Mr. Hunter's excellent outline of the proceedings in a suit in equity, which has become a text-book with the law student. This work has been well done by Mr. Lawrance, who has strictly preserved the scheme of the original sketch, while adapting it to the various changes that have been made. All former editions must be at once exchanged for this one."—Law Times.

"As an excellent introduction to the study of chancery practice the book has established its position, and we think the editor has done wisely in merely introducing such amendments as the alteration in the law by statutes and orders requires, and abstaining from any attempt to make it a manual of practice."—Law Magazine.

Lewis's Introduction to Equity Drafting.

Post 8vo., 12*s.* cloth.

PRINCIPLES of EQUITY DRAFTING; with an Appendix of Forms. By HUBERT LEWIS, B.A., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law; Author of "Principles of Conveyancing," &c.

 This Work, intended to explain the general principles of Equity Drafting, as well as to exemplify the Pleadings of the Court of Chancery, will, it is hoped, be useful to lawyers resorting to the New Equity Jurisdiction of the County Courts.

"We have little doubt that this work will soon gain a favorable place in the estimation of the profession. It is written in a clear attractive style, and is plainly the result of much thoughtful and conscientious labour."—Law Magazine and Review.

"Mr. Lewis's work is likely to have a much wider circle of readers than he could have anticipated when he commenced it, for almost every page will be applicable to County Court Practice, should the bill, in any shape or under any title, be retained in the new jurisdiction,—without it we fear that equity in the County Courts will be a mass of uncertainty,—with it every practitioner must learn the art of equity drafting, and he will find no better teacher than Mr. Lewis."—Law Times.

"This will, we think, be found a very useful work, not only to students for the bar and solicitors practising in the County Courts, as anticipated by the author, but also to the equity draftsman."—Law Journal.

Lewis's Introduction to Conveyancing.

8vo., 18*s.* cloth.

PRINCIPLES of CONVEYANCING explained and illustrated by Concise Precedents; with an Appendix on the effect of the Transfer of Land Act in modifying and shortening Conveyances. By HUBERT LEWIS, B.A., late Scholar of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The preface arrested our attention, and the examination we have made of the whole treatise has given us (what may be called a new sensation) pleasure in the perusal of a work on Conveyancing. We have, indeed, read it with pleasure and profit, and we may say at once that Mr. Lewis is entitled to the credit of having produced a very useful, and, at the same time, original work. This will appear from a mere outline of his plan, which is very ably worked out. The manner in which his dissertations elucidate his subject is clear and practical, and his expositions, with the help of his precedents, have the best of all qualities in such a treatise, being eminently judicious and substantial. Mr. Lewis's work is conceived in the right spirit. Although a learned and goodly volume, it may yet, with perfect propriety, be called a 'handy book.' It is besides a courageous attempt at legal improvement; and it is, perhaps, by works of such a character that law reform may be best accomplished."—Law Magazine and Review.

"It was still felt that a work explanatory and illustrative of conveyancing precedents remained a desideratum. Mr Lewis proposes to supply this want in the work now before us The book will be of the greatest use to those who have some antecedent knowledge of real property law, but who have not had much experience in the preparation of conveyances. 'How to do it' might well be the motto of the author, and certainly no ordinary lawyer can peruse Mr. Hubert Lewis's book without making himself much more competent to prepare and understand conveyancing than he was before. On the whole we consider that the work is deserving of high praise, both for design and execution. It is wholly free from the vice of book making, and indicates considerable reflection and learning. Mr. Lewis has, at all events, succeeded in producing a work to meet an acknowledged want, and we have no doubt he will find many grateful readers amongst more advanced, not less than among younger, students. In an appendix, devoted to the Land Transfer Act of last session there are some useful and novel criticisms on its provisions."—Solicitors' Journal.

Kerr's Action at Law.—Third Edition.

12mo., 13*s.* cloth.

AN ACTION AT LAW: being an Outline of the Jurisdiction of the Superior Courts of Common Law, with an Elementary View of the Proceedings in Actions therein. By ROBERT MALCOLM KERR, Barrister at Law; now Judge of the Sheriff's Court of the City of London. Third Edition.

"There is considerable merit in both works (John William Smith's and Malcolm Kerr's); but the second (Kerr) has rather the advantage, in being more recent, and published since the Common Law Procedure Act, 1860."—Jurist.

"Mr. Kerr's book is more full and detailed than that of Mr. John William Smith, and is therefore better adapted for those who desire to obtain not merely a general notion but also a practical acquaintance with Common Law Procedure."—Solicitors' Journal.

Tudor's Leading Cases on Real Property, &c.—2nd Edit.

One thick vol. royal 8vo., 42*s.* cloth.

A SELECTION OF LEADING CASES on the LAW RELATING to REAL PROPERTY, Conveyancing, and the Construction of Wills and Deeds; with Notes. By OWEN DAVIES TUDOR, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law. Author of "A Selection of Leading Cases in Equity." Second Edition.

"The Second Edition is now before us, and we are able to say that the same extensive knowledge and the same laborious industry as have been exhibited by Mr. Tudor on former occasions characterise this later production of his legal authorship; and it is enough at this moment to reiterate an opinion that Mr. Tudor has well maintained the high legal reputation which his standard works have achieved in all countries where the English language is spoken, and the decisions of our Courts are quoted."—Law Magazine and Review.

"The work before us comprises a digest of decisions which, if not exhaustive of all the principles of our real property code, will at least be found to leave nothing untouched or unelaborated under the numerous legal doctrines to which the cases severally relate. To Mr. Tudor's treatment of all these subjects, so complicated and so varied, we accord our entire commendation. There are no omissions of any important cases relative to the various branches of the law comprised in the work, nor are there any omissions or defects in his statement of the law itself applicable to the cases discussed by him. We cordially recommend the work to the practitioner and the student alike, but especially to the former."—Solicitors' Journal.

"This and the other volumes of Mr. Tudor are almost a law library in themselves, and we are satisfied that the student would learn more law from the careful reading of them than he would acquire from double the time given to the elaborate treatises which learned professors recommend the student to peruse, with entire forgetfulness that time and brains are limited, and that to do what they advise would be the work of a life. Smith and Mr Tudor will together give them such a knowledge of law as they could not obtain from a whole library of text books, and of law that will be useful every day, instead of law that they will not want three times in their lives. At this well the practising lawyer might beneficially refresh his memory by a draught, when a leisure hour will permit him to study a leading case. No law library should be without this most useful book."—Law Times.

Benham's Student's Examination Guide.

12mo. 3*s.* cloth.

THE STUDENT'S GUIDE to the PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION for ATTORNEYS and SOLICITORS, and also to the Oxford and Cambridge Local Examinations and the College of Preceptors; to which are added numerous Suggestions and Examination Questions, selected from those asked at the Law Institution. By JAMES ERLE BENHAM, of King's College, London.

"The book is artistically arranged. It will become a useful guide and instructor not only to law students but to every student who is preparing for a preliminary examination."—Law Journal.

"The book is written in a clear and agreeable style, and will no doubt be found useful by the class of readers for whom it is intended."—Law Magazine and Review.

"Mr. Benham has produced a very useful manual. He gives many suggestions on all the subjects of examination and full information thereon"—Law Examination Reporter.

"He has succeeded in producing a book which will doubtless prove useful. The sets of examination papers appear to be judiciously selected and are tolerably full."—Irish Law Times.

Tomkins and Jencken's Modern Roman Law.

8vo., 14*s.* cloth.

COMPENDIUM of the MODERN ROMAN LAW. Founded upon the Treatises of Puchta, Von Vangerow, Arndts, Franz Mœhler and the Corpus Juris Civilis. By FREDERICK J. TOMKINS, Esq., M.A., D.C.L., Author of the "Institutes of Roman Law," Translator of "Gaius," &c., and HENRY DIEDRICH JENCKEN, Esq., Barristers at Law, of Lincoln's Inn.

"Mr. Tomkins and Mr. Jencken could not have written such an excellent book as this if they had not devoted many laborious days, probably years, to the study of Roman Law in its entirety, and to research into the laws of continental states, for the purpose of learning what principles of Roman Law are preserved in their jurisprudence."—Law Times.

"To those who think with us that the study of the modern civil law has been too much neglected in the education of solicitors, the admirable book whose title we have above announced will be indeed invaluable."—Law Examination Journal.

"They have unquestionably given us a most valuable contribution on the literature of Roman Law, and one which ought to rapidly work its way to public favor."—North British Mail.

"We cordially wish success to a book which from the care bestowed upon it by two experienced authors can scarcely fail, we should hope, to take a respectable place among the educational works on Roman Law, which seem likely to form a special feature among the legal publications of the present epoch."—Athenæum.

"A valuable contribution to a kind of literature which English jurists are only now beginning to value at its true worth. Dr. Tomkins and his fellow-worker, Mr. H. D. Jencken, have bestowed much labour on their task."—Echo.

"Their work is well arranged and clearly written, and presents in an agreeable and readable form the principles of the great system of Roman Civil Law. It is admirably adapted for the use of students, while the copious references which it contains to the writings of the great civilians upon whose works it is based render it a valuable text-book for the more advanced practitioner."—Irish Law Times.

Latham's Law of Window Lights.

Post 8vo., 10*s.* cloth.

A TREATISE on the LAW of WINDOW LIGHTS. By FRANCIS LAW LATHAM, of the Inner Temple, Esq., Barrister at Law.

"This is not merely a valuable addition to the law library of the practitioner, it is a book that every law student will read with profit. It exhausts the subject of which it treats."—Law Times.

"His arrangement is logical, and he discusses fully each point of his subject. The work, in our opinion, is both perspicuous and able, and we cannot but compliment the author on it"—Law Journal.

"A treatise on this subject was wanted, and Mr. Latham has succeeded in meeting that want."—Athenæum.

"Mr. Latham is evidently one of those authors who like to have a complete skeleton of their subject elaborated before putting pen to paper; and the consequence is, that this little work is one which we have much pleasure in recommending to the profession. The sequence of discussion is well ordered, and the author's plan well adhered to; and although the text comprises less than 250 octavo pages, the subject is quite exhaustively treated. To solicitors the volume will, we think, be particularly serviceable. Armed with the work we have now reviewed, the practitioner will be in a fair way to cope successfully with the most exigent client who comes to consult him about his windows."—Solicitors' Journal.

"This subject has acquired a general commercial interest, and a clear concise work upon it is, at this time, very opportune. Mr. Latham's treatise on the Law of Window Lights appears to supply in a convenient form all the information which, in a general way, may be required. The text throughout is lucid and is well supported by precedents."—Building News.

"Mr. Latham has done well in providing a new treatise on the subject, and setting forth some of the more recent decisions of our courts. It is well arranged and clearly written. We recommend the book."—Builder.

Tudor's Law of Charitable Trusts.—Second Edition.

Post 8vo., 18*s.* cloth.

THE LAW OF CHARITABLE TRUSTS; with the Statutes to the end of Session 1870, the Orders, Regulations and Instructions, issued pursuant thereto; and a Selection of Schemes. By OWEN DAVIES TUDOR, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law; Author of "Leading Cases in Equity;" "Real Property and Conveyancing;" &c. Second Edition.

"No living writer is more capable than Mr. Tudor of producing such a work: his Leading Cases in Equity, and also on the Law of Real Property, have deservedly earned for him the highest reputation as a learned, careful and judicious text-writer. We have only to add that the index is very carefully compiled."—Solicitors' Journal.

"Mr. Tudor's excellent little book on Charitable Trusts. It is in all respects the text-book for the lawyer, as well as a hand-book for reference by trustees and others engaged in the management of charities."—Law Times.

Gaius's Roman Law, by Tomkins and Lemon.

Complete in 1 vol. 8vo., 27*s.* cloth extra.

(Dedicated by permission to Lord Chancellor Hatherley.)

THE COMMENTARIES OF GAIUS ON THE ROMAN LAW: with an English Translation and Annotations. By FREDERICK J. TOMKINS, Esq., M.A., D.C.L., and WILLIAM GEORGE LEMON, Esq., LL.B. Barristers at Law, of Lincoln's Inn.

"We congratulate the authors on the production of a work creditable alike in its inception and its progress. The translation is on the whole satisfactory: the annotations are often valuable and compiled from trustworthy sources."—Law Journal.

"They have done a good service to the study of Roman Law, and deserve the thanks of those who take an interest in legal literature."—Solicitors' Journal.

"After a careful perusal of the present work, we feel bound to speak in the highest terms of the manner in which Mr. Tomkins and Mr. Lemon have executed their task. We have no hesitation in pronouncing the work to be a most valuable contribution to juristical learning, and we unhesitatingly recommend its careful perusal to all students of Roman Law."—Law Magazine.

"The translation is carefully executed, and the annotations show extensive knowledge of the Roman Law."—Athenæum.

"The book is in every respect one of the most valuable contributions, from an English source, to our legal literature which the last half century has witnessed."—Edinburgh Evening Courant.

"The want of an edition of the Commentaries of Gaius for English students has now been supplied by Dr. Tomkins and Mr. Lemon in a manner which leaves nothing to be desired. The translation of the Latin text is excellent; and the notes, upon which the value of the work mainly depends, are full of the most ample learning upon the matter of the text."—Irish Law Times.

"This is the first time that the text of Gaius has been translated into English, and it is remarkably well done by Messrs. Tomkins and Lemon in the part before us, who have also enriched the text by many valuable notes."—Law Examination Reporter.

Phillimore's Commentaries on International Law.

COMMENTARIES on INTERNATIONAL LAW. By the Right Hon. SIR ROBERT PHILLIMORE, Knt., now Judge of the High Court of Admiralty of England.

 Vol. 1, second edition, price 25s., Vol. 2, price 22s., Vol. 3, price 32s., Vol. 4, price 30s., may be had separately to complete sets, or the work may be had complete in four Vols., price 5l. 9s. cloth.

Extract from Pamphlet on "American Neutrality," by GEORGE BEMIS (Boston, U.S.).—"Sir Robert Phillimore, the present Queen's Advocate, and author of the most comprehensive and systematic 'Commentary on International Law' that England has produced."

"The authority of this work is admittedly great, and the learning and ability displayed in its preparation have been recognized by writers on public law both on the Continent of Europe and in the United States. With this necessarily imperfect sketch we must conclude our notice of the first volume of a work which forms an important contribution to the literature of public law. The book is of great utility, and one which should find a place in the library of every civilian."—Law Magazine.

"We cordially welcome a new edition of vol. 1. It is a work that ought to be studied by every educated man, and which is of constant use to the public writer and statesman. We wish, indeed, that our public writers would read it more abundantly than they have done, as they would then avoid serious errors in discussing foreign questions. Any general criticism of a book which has been received as a standard work would be superfluous; but we may remark, that whilst Sir Robert strictly adheres to the canons of legal authorship, and never gives a statement without an authority or offers a conclusion which is not manifestly deducible from established facts or authoritative utterances, yet so lucid is his style, we had almost said so popular, so clear is the enunciation of principles, so graphic the historical portions, that the book may be read with pleasure as well as profit. It will not be out of place to further remark, that the arrangement is excellent, the table of contents, the list of authorities are complete, and, therefore, these Commentaries are singularly handy for reference. Altogether this work is a witness to the zeal, industry and ability of Sir R. Phillimore. It will not only be read at home, but also in the United States, and it cannot fail to smooth the way for the thorough international understanding between England and America that the true men of both countries so ardently desire."—Law Journal.

From the Law Times.

"The preparation of it could not have been confided to more able hands than those of Mr. Shelford, the veteran authority on real property law. With the industry that distinguishes him he has done ample justice to his task. In carefulness we have in him a second Crabb, in erudition Crabb's superior; and the result is a work of which the original author would have been proud, could it have appeared under his own auspices. It is not a book to be quoted, nor indeed could its merits be exhibited by quotation. It is essentially a book of practice, which can only be described in rude outline and dismissed with applause, and a recommendation of it to the notice of those for whose service it has been so laboriously compiled."

From the Solicitors' Journal.

"The collection of precedents contained in these two volumes are all that could be desired. They are particularly well adapted for Solicitors, being of a really practical character. They are moreover free from the useless repetitions of common forms that so much increase the bulk and expense of some collections that we could name. We know not of any collection of conveyancing precedents that would make it so possible for a tyro to put together a presentable draft at an exigency, or which are more handy in every respect, even for the experienced draftsman. Mr. Shelford has proved himself in this task to be not unworthy of his former reputation. To those familiar with his other works it will be a sufficient recommendation of this."

From the Law Magazine and Review.

"To this important part of his duty—the remodelling and perfecting of the Forms—even with the examination which we have already been able to afford this work, we are able to affirm, that the learned editor has been eminently successful and effected valuable improvements."

From the Law Chronicle.

"It possesses one distinctive feature in devoting more attention than usual in such works to forms of a commercial nature We are satisfied from an examination of the present with the immediately preceding edition that Mr. Shelford has very considerably improved the character of the work, both in the prefaces and in the forms. On the whole the two volumes of Crabb's Precedents, as edited by Mr. Leonard Shelford, will be found extremely useful in a solicitor's office, presenting a large amount of real property learning, with very numerous precedents: indeed we know of no book so justly entitled to the appellation of 'handy' as the fifth edition of Mr. Crabb's Precedents."

Mosely's Articled Clerks' Handy-Book.

12mo., 7*s.* cloth.

A PRACTICAL HANDY-BOOK of ELEMENTARY LAW, designed for the use of Articled Clerks, with a Course of Study and Hints on Reading for the Intermediate and Final Examinations. By M. S. MOSELY, Solicitor, Clifford's Inn Prizeman, M. T. 1867.

"This useful little book is intended for the use of articled clerks during the period of their articles. The style of this book is peculiar: it is an exaggeration of the style adopted by Mr. Haynes in his admirable 'Outlines of Equity.' The author seems to think the adoption of such a style the only way to make the study of the law popular and we are not prepared to say he is wrong."—Law Magazine and Review.

"The design of this little book is to combine instruction, advice and amusement, if anything amusing can be extracted from the routine of a solicitor's office and the studies of articled clerks. The book will certainly be found useful by any articled clerk, for it contains much information which it is sometimes very troublesome to find, and the facetiousness of Mr. Mosely's manner will doubtless help to grease the course of a rough and uneasy subject."—Law Journal.

"There are few who read this book with care who will not readily admit that on many intricate points of law their notions have become much clearer than before their acquaintance with it. Both parts are well worked out, and will be found useful; but in the second division of each chapter the law student will find most valuable information, as there Mr. Mosely not only marks out the course of reading which he recommends for each year, but also carefully analyses the contents of each book, and points out those chapters and subjects which it will be most advantageous for the student to master at the first reading, and those which he ought to defer till a second perusal and a wider experience have made him more competent to understand them. The style is remarkably good and, considering the subject, free from technical expressions."—Irish Law Times.

Rouse's Copyhold Manual.—Third Edition.

THE COPYHOLD ENFRANCHISEMENT MANUAL, giving the Law, Practice and Forms in Enfranchisements at Common Law and under Statute, and in Commutations; with the Values of Enfranchisements from the Lord's various Rights: the Principles of Calculation being clearly explained, and made practical by numerous Rules, Tables and Examples. Also all the Copyhold Acts, and several other Statutes and Notes. Third Edition. By ROLLA ROUSE, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law, Author of "The Practical Conveyancer," &c.

"This new edition follows the plan of its predecessor, adopting a fivefold division:—1. The Law. 2. The Practice, with Practical Suggestions to Lords, Stewards and Copyholders. 3. The Mathematical consideration of the Subject in all its Details, with Rules, Tables and Examples. 4. Forms. 5. The Statutes, with Notes. Of these, we can only repeat what we have said before, that they exhaust the subject; they give to the practitioner all the materials required by him to conduct the enfranchisement of a copyhold, whether voluntary or compulsory."—Law Times.

"When we consider what favor Mr. Rouse's Practical Man and Practical Conveyancer have found with the profession, we feel sure the legal world will greet with pleasure a new and improved edition of his copyhold manual. The third edition of that work is before us. It is a work of great practical value, suitable to lawyers and laymen. We can freely and heartily recommend this volume to the practitioner, the steward and the copyholder."—Law Magazine.

"Now, however, that copyhold tenures are being frequently converted into freeholds, Mr. Rouse's treatise will doubtless be productive of very extensive benefit; for it seems to us to have been very carefully prepared, exceedingly well composed and written, and to indicate much experience in copyhold law on the part of the author."—Solicitors' Journal.

Shelford's Succession, Probate and Legacy Duties. Second Edition.

12mo., 16*s.* cloth.

THE LAW relating to the PROBATE, LEGACY and SUCCESSION DUTIES in ENGLAND, IRELAND and SCOTLAND, including all the Statutes and the Decisions on those Subjects: with Forms and Official Regulations. By LEONARD SHELFORD, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. The Second Edition, with many Alterations and Additions.

"The book is written mainly for solicitors. Mr. Shelford has accordingly planned his work with careful regard to its practical utility and daily use."—Solicitors' Journal.

"One of the most useful and popular of his productions, and being now the text book on the subject nothing remains but to make known its appearance to our readers. Its merits have been already tested by most of them."—Law Times.

"On the whole Mr. Shelford's book appears to us to be the best and most complete work on this extremely intricate subject."—Law Magazine.

Davis's Law of Master and Servant.

12mo. 6*s.* cloth.

THE MASTER AND SERVANT ACT, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 141), with an Introduction, copious Notes, Tables of Offences, and Forms of Proceedings, prepared expressly for this Work. By JAMES E. DAVIS, Esq., Barrister at Law, Stipendiary Magistrate, Stoke-upon-Trent.

 Besides the Act and copious Notes, Introduction, and a variety of Forms of Summons, Orders, Convictions, Recognizances, &c., specially prepared for this work, Tables have been framed classifying all the offences within the jurisdiction of Justices. It is hoped that this will be found useful, not only to Magistrates and their Clerks, but to the Legal Profession generally, for in consequence of the new Act not describing the offences, but merely referring to a schedule of seventeen former Acts, it is very difficult to say what cases are or are not within the purview of the new Act. The decisions of the Superior Courts, so far as they are applicable to the present law, are also given.

Woolrych's Law of Sewers.—Third Edition.

8vo., 12*s.* cloth.

A TREATISE of the LAW of SEWERS, including the DRAINAGE ACTS. By HUMPHRY W. WOOLRYCH, Serjeant at Law. Third Edition, with considerable Additions and Alterations.

"Two editions of it have been speedily exhausted, and a third called for. The author is an accepted authority on all subjects of this class."—Law Times.

"This is a third and greatly enlarged edition of a book which has already obtained an established reputation as the most complete discussion of the subject adapted to modern times. Since the treatise of Mr. Serjeant Callis in the early part of the 17th century, no work filling the same place has been added to the literature of the Profession. It is a work of no slight labour to digest and arrange this mass of legislation; this task, however, Mr. Serjeant Woolrych has undertaken, and an examination of his book will, we think, convince the most exacting that he has fully succeeded. No one should attempt to meddle with the Law of Sewers without its help."—Solicitors' Journal.

Grant's Law of Corporations in General.

Royal 8vo., 26*s.* boards.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE on the LAW of CORPORATIONS in GENERAL, as well Aggregate as Sole; including Municipal Corporations; Railway, Banking, Canal, and other Joint-Stock and Trading Bodies; Dean and Chapters; Universities; Colleges; Schools; Hospitals; with quasi Corporations aggregate, as Guardians of the Poor, Churchwardens, Churchwardens and Overseers, etc.; and also Corporations sole, as Bishops, Deans, Canons, Archdeacons, Parsons, etc. By JAMES GRANT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

J. Chitty, jun's. Precedents in Pleading.—Third Edition.

Complete in One Vol. Royal 8vo., 38*s.* cloth.

J. CHITTY, JUN'S. PRECEDENTS in PLEADING; with copious Notes on Practice, Pleading and Evidence. Third Edition. By the late THOMPSON CHITTY, Esq., and by LEOFRIC TEMPLE, R. G. WILLIAMS, and CHARLES JEFFERY, Esquires, Barristers at Law. (Part 2 may, for the present, be had separately, price 18*s.* cloth, to complete sets.)

"To enter into detailed criticism and praise of this standard work would be quite out of place. In the present instance the matter has fallen into competent hands, who have spared no pains. This valuable and useful work is brought down to the present time, altered in accordance with the cases and statutes now in force. Great care has been expended by the competent editors, and its usefulness, as heretofore, will be found not to be confined to the chambers of the special pleader, but to be of a more extended character. To those who knew the work of old no recommendation is wanted, to those younger members of the profession who have not that privilege we would suggest that they should at once make its acquaintance."—Law Journal.

Scriven's Law of Copyholds.—5th Edit. by Stalman.

Abridged in 1 vol. royal 8vo., £1 : 10*s.* cloth.

A TREATISE ON COPYHOLD, CUSTOMARY FREEHOLD and ANCIENT DEMESNE TENURE, with the Jurisdiction of Courts Baron and Courts Leet. By JOHN SCRIVEN, Serjeant at Law. Fifth Edition, containing references to Cases and Statutes to 1867. By HENRY STALMAN, of the Inner Temple, Esq., Barrister at Law.

"No lawyer can see or hear the word 'copyhold' without associating with it the name of Scriven, whose book has been always esteemed not merely the best but the only one of any worth. Until a commutation of the tenure for a fixed rent-charge, after the manner of a tithe commutation, is compelled by the legislature, this treatise will lose none of its usefulness to the solicitors in the country."—Law Times.

"It would be wholly superfluous to offer one word of comment on the general body of the work. Scriven on Copyholds has for exactly half a century been not only a standard work but one of unimpeachable authority, and in its pages the present generation has learned all that is known of copyhold and customary tenures. All that is necessary to say is, that in the present edition of Scriven on Copyholds Mr. Stalman has omitted what it was useless to retain, and inserted what it was necessary to add. Until copyholds have disappeared utterly, it is at least certain that Scriven on Copyholds by Stalman will hold undisputed sway in the profession."—Law Journal.

Davis's Law of Registration and Elections.

One small 12mo. vol., 15*s.* cloth.

MANUAL OF THE LAW AND PRACTICE OF ELECTIONS AND REGISTRATION. Comprising all the Statutes, with Notes and Introduction, and a Supplement containing the Cases on Appeal down to 1869, the Rules relating to Election Petitions, and a complete Index to the whole Work. By JAMES EDWARD DAVIS, Esq., Barrister at Law, Author of "Manual of Practice and Evidence in the County Courts," &c.

"A work, which, in our judgment, is the handiest and most useful of the manuals which the Reform Act of 1867 has brought into existence."—Law Magazine.

"We think this the best of the now numerous works on this subject. It has a great advantage in its arrangement over those which are merely new editions of works published before the recent legislation. To read through consecutively, in order to obtain a fair mastery of the whole subject, we have no hesitation in highly recommending this work."—Solicitors' Journal.

"No one comes forward with better credentials than Mr. Davis, and the book before us seems to possess the qualities essential to a guide to a discharge of their duties by the officials. The scheme of Mr. Davis's work is very simple."—Law Journal

THE SUPPLEMENT may be had separately, price 3*s. sewed.*

Browning's Divorce and Matrimonial Causes Practice.

Post 8vo., 8*s.* cloth.

THE PRACTICE and PROCEDURE of the COURT for DIVORCE and MATRIMONIAL CAUSES, including the Acts, Rules, Orders, copious Notes of Cases and Forms of Practical Proceedings, with Tables of Fees and Bills of Costs. By W. ERNST BROWNING, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

Brandon's Law of Foreign Attachment.

8vo., 14*s.* cloth.

A TREATISE upon the CUSTOMARY LAW of FOREIGN ATTACHMENT, and the PRACTICE of the MAYOR'S COURT of the CITY OF LONDON therein. With Forms of Procedure. By WOODTHORPE BRANDON, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

Oke's Magisterial Synopsis.—Tenth Edition.

Two vols., 8vo., 58*s.* cloth.

THE MAGISTERIAL SYNOPSIS: a Practical Guide for Magistrates, their Clerks, Attornies and Constables; Summary Convictions and Indictable Offences, with their Penalties, Punishments, Procedure, &c., being Alphabetically and Tabularly arranged. By GEORGE C. OKE, Chief Clerk to the Lord Mayor of London. Tenth Edition.

"We are really at a loss to discover any criticism which can fairly be offered on this remarkable work. A new edition every two years is a success such as rarely falls to the lot of the greatest of legal authors, and no one pretends to deny that Mr. Oke has fairly earned his good fortune. The first edition started with 410 pages of matter. Legislation, judicial decisions and the unwearied research, care and skill of the author have swelled 410 into 1402 pages, so that he is driven to offer an apology for the bulk of the book and for its compulsory division into two handsome volumes. It would be idle in us to take a survey of the general contents of a work which is familiar to all persons who are concerned in the administration of justice in petty sessions. It is enough to say that Mr. Oke's Synopsis is not only the standard guide to the magisterial bench, but that it is regarded throughout England as the indispensable companion of every justice of the peace."—Law Journal.

"Mr. Oke's Synopsis has been for so many years before the public, and its reputation is so fully established, that any elaborate criticism upon the work as a whole would be out of place on the occasion of the publication of a new edition. The functions of magistrates out of quarter sessions and of their clerks and officers are so many and of so very miscellaneous a character, that there is perhaps no part of our judicial system in which the services of a reliable and easily accessible guide is so absolutely necessary to all those who have to take any part in the working of the system. To meet this need there are few men who have better reason to know exactly what is necessary than Mr. Oke, and few men better able to supply it, and the success with which he has laboured to this end has been amply attested by the reception which the various editions of his work have met with. But the very nature of the subject with which this work deals, renders frequent new editions most important. This edition incorporates the statute law affecting magistrates since the date of the last edition, as well as the decisions of the courts; and, whether by good luck or good guidance, the publication has been so timed as to enable the author to bring the statute law down to the actual date of issue. The work in its present form is considerably increased in bulk, but it retains its two great merits—completeness and conciseness."—Solicitors' Journal.

"The tenth edition of this valuable compendium of magisterial law makes its appearance in two volumes, a great improvement for convenience of reference upon the single bulky volume of the former editions. The position which the work has gained and the growing demand for it are shown by the fact that a ninth edition was published so lately as 1866. In accordance with the suggestion made to Mr. Oke, the present edition has been prepared and issued immediately after the fourth edition of its equally useful companion, The Magisterial Formulist. The careful and conscientious treatment which Mr. Oke always bestows upon whatever he takes in hand, entitles him to full credit when he says that 'many titles have been enlarged, much new matter inserted, and a variety of minute improvements made in the references, upon all of which I have bestowed my personal attention and utmost care.'"—Law Magazine.

Oke's Game and Fishery Laws.—Second Edition.

12mo., 10*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

A HANDY-BOOK of the GAME and FISHERY LAWS; containing the whole Law as to Game, Licences and Certificates, Poaching Prevention, Trespass, Rabbits, Deer, Dogs, Birds and Poisoned Grain throughout the United Kingdom, and Private and Salmon Fisheries in England. Systematically arranged, with the Acts, Decisions, Notes, Forms, Suggestions, &c., &c. By GEORGE C. OKE, Author of "The Magisterial Synopsis," &c. &c. Second Edition.

"The first edition having enjoyed a rapid sale, a second has enabled Mr. Oke greatly to enlarge his design and to add the very important statutes which have been passed since the publication of the first edition. This is now really what it is termed, a Handy Book of the Game and Fishery Laws, and gives all the information that can be required by the sportsman or his legal adviser."—Law Times.

"The work is carefully composed, and contains a full index."—Solicitors' Journal.

"Care and Industry are all that can be shown in such productions, and these qualities are generally shown in the present works. Mr. Oke's book takes a somewhat larger range than Mr. Paterson's, as it embraces the late statute relating to the Salmon Fisheries."—Athenæum.

Oke's Magisterial Formulist.—Fourth Edition.

One thick volume, 8vo., 38*s.* cloth.

The MAGISTERIAL FORMULIST: being a complete Collection of Forms and Precedents for practical use in all Cases out of Quarter Sessions, and in Parochial Matters, by Magistrates, their Clerks, Attornies and Constables: with an Introduction, Explanatory Directions, Variations and Notes. By GEORGE C. OKE, Author of "The Magisterial Synopsis." Fourth Edition, enlarged and improved.

"The publication of a new edition of this most useful collection of forms has been urgently called for. Mr. Oke's works are so well known to all who are concerned in the administration of magisterial law, that we need say no more than that the present edition seems to have been prepared with his usual care. On a reference to a very full index at the end of the book, we have been unable to detect the omission of any subject in the place where it might be expected to be found, and such forms as the author has had to draw, and not merely to transcribe, appear well executed."—Solicitors' Journal.

"Mr. Oke has had many predecessors in his office of Chief Clerk to the Lord Mayor of London of skill, learning and reputation, but it would be impossible to name any one of such officers who has rendered such signal services to the administration of the law by the justices as the author of the book before us. It is indeed difficult to offer any remarks of moment upon a work which has gone through three editions, and has been acknowledged as complete by all who has had occasion to use it. But time alone, and the mass of new legislation which it has brought with it, have made the revision of the book necessary. The important changes and extensions of the law administered by the magistrates since the session of 1851 have justified and demanded a new edition, and in that new edition we believe will be found the same qualities of accuracy and completeness which distinguished its three predecessors. No clerk to justices, and no justice who is anxious to discharge his onerous functions successfully, should be without the 'Magisterial Formulist' and the 'Magisterial Synopsis;' and it need scarcely be added that those members of the profession who are brought in contact with business in petty sessions will derive great assistance from them."—Law Journal.

"This work is too well known to need eulogy. It is in universal use in magistrates' courts; it has been out of print for some time, and a new edition was urgently required. We believe that Mr. Oke purposely delayed it that it might be made contemporaneous, or nearly so, with the Synopsis. The contents are brought down to the end of last year, and consequently it includes all the forms required by the new statutes and decisions of the six years that have elapsed since the publication of the third edition. They have been arranged under divers new titles, and especially the modes of describing indictable offences have been much enlarged. It is a book that has been known so long, and so extensively, that no further description of it is needed now." Law Times.

Oke's Law of Turnpike Roads.—Second Edition.

12mo., 18*s.* cloth.

THE LAWS of TURNPIKE ROADS; comprising the whole of the General Acts; the Acts as to the Union of Trusts, for facilitating Arrangements with their Creditors; the Interference of Railways and other Public Works with Roads, their Non-repair, and enforcing Contributions from Parishes (including the Acts as to South Wales Turnpike Roads), &c. &c.; practically arranged, with Cases, Notes, Forms, &c. &c. By GEORGE C. OKE, Author of "The Magisterial Synopsis." Second Edition.

"In the 'Synopsis' Mr. Oke is unique; the plan was perfectly original, and he has no competitor. In the Turnpike Law he is himself a competitor with others, who had previously possession of the field. Nevertheless, so well has he executed his design that his volume has fairly taken precedence in the esteem of the profession, because he has written it with the same industrious research and painstaking correction which distinguished the 'Synopsis.'"—Law Times.

"All Mr. Oke's works are well done, and his 'Turnpike Laws' is an admirable specimen of the class of books required for the guidance of magistrates and legal practitioners in country districts."—Solicitors' Journal.

Glen's Poor Law Orders.—Seventh Edition.

Post 8vo., 21*s.* cloth.

The GENERAL CONSOLIDATED and other ORDERS of the POOR LAW COMMISSIONERS and the POOR LAW BOARD; with explanatory Notes elucidating the Orders, Tables of Statutes, Cases and Index to the Orders and Cases. By W. C. GLEN, Esq, Barrister at Law. Seventh Edition.

Chadwick's Probate Court Manual.

Royal 8vo., 12*s.* cloth.

EXAMPLES of ADMINISTRATION BONDS for the COURT of PROBATE; exhibiting the Principle of various Grants of Administration, and the correct Mode of preparing the Bonds in respect thereof; also Directions for preparing the Oaths, arranged for practical utility. With Extracts from the Statutes; also various Forms of Affirmation prescribed by Acts of Parliament, and a Supplemental Notice, bringing the work down to 1865. By SAMUEL CHADWICK, of Her Majesty's Court of Probate.

"We undertake to say that the possession of this volume by practitioners will prevent many a hitch and awkward delay, provoking to the lawyer himself and difficult to be satisfactorily explained to the clients."—Law Magazine and Review.

"Mr. Chadwick's volume will be a necessary part of the law library of the practitioner, for he has collected precedents that are in constant requirement. This is purely a book of practice, but therefore the more valuable. It tells the reader what to do, and that is the information most required after a lawyer begins to practise."—Law Times.

Grant's Law of Banking.—Second Edition by Fisher.

8vo. 21*s.* cloth.

GRANT'S LAW of BANKERS and BANKING and BANKS OF ISSUE, Limited and Chartered, and Winding-up; Directors, Managers and Officers; and the Law as to Cheques, Circular Notes or Letters of Credit, Bank Notes, Exchequer Bills, Coupons, Deposits, &c. (Appendix contains the Bank Notes Issue Bill, and Reasons for Bill, and Official Bank Returns.) Second Edition. By R. A. FISHER, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

"The present editor has very much increased the value of the original work, a work whose sterling merits had already raised it to the rank of a standard text-book."—Law Magazine.

"No man in the profession was more competent to treat the subject of Banking than Mr. Grant. This volume appears opportunely. To all engaged in the litigations, as well as to all legal advisers of Bankers, Mr. Grant's work will be an invaluable assistant. It is a clear and careful treatise on a subject not already exhausted, and it must become the text-book upon it."—Law Times.

"A Second Edition of Mr. Grant's well-known treatise on this branch of the law has been called for and very ably supplied by Mr. Fisher."—Law Times, Second Notice.

"The learning and industry which were so conspicuous in Mr. Grant's former work are equally apparent in this. The book supplies a real want, which has long been felt both by the profession and by the public at large."—Jurist.

"We commend this work to our readers. It is at once practical and intelligible, and is of use alike to the unprofessional as well as the professional reader. No bank, whether a private concern or a joint-stock company, should be without it."—Money Market Review.

Parkinson's Common Law Chamber Practice.

12mo., 7*s.* cloth.

A HANDY BOOK FOR THE COMMON LAW JUDGES' CHAMBERS. By GEO. H. PARKINSON, Chamber Clerk to the Hon. Mr. Justice Byles.

"For this work Mr. Parkinson is eminently qualified."—Jurist.

"It is extremely well calculated for the purpose for which it is intended. So much work is now done in Common Law Chambers by junior clerks that such a little treatise is much wanted. Mr. Parkinson has performed his task skilfully and with care."—Solicitors' Journal.

"The practice in Chambers has become sufficiently important to call for a treatise devoted to it, nor could a more competent man for the task have presented himself than Mr. Parkinson, whose great experience as well as intelligence have long placed him in the position of an authority on all matters appertaining to this peculiar but very extensive branch of Common Law Practice."—Law Times.

"There is much that would prove very useful to the practitioner in Mr. Parkinson's compilation, and which, so far as we are aware, is not to be found in any other book collected with equal conciseness."—Law Magazine and Review.

Coombs' Manual of Solicitors' Bookkeeping.

8vo., 10s. 6d. cloth.

A MANUAL of SOLICITORS' BOOKKEEPING: comprising Practical Exemplifications of a Concise and Simple Plan of Double Entry, with Forms of Account and other Books relating to Bills, Cash, &c., showing their Operation, giving Instructions for Keeping, Posting and Balancing them, and Directions for Drawing Costs, adapted to a large or small, sole or partnership business. By W. B. COOMBS, Law Accountant and Costs Draftsman.

 The various Account Books described in the above System, the forms of which are copyright, may be had from the Publishers at the prices stated in the work, page 274.

"It adds some excellent instructions for drawing bills of costs. Mr. Coombs is a practical man, and has produced a practical book."—Law Times.

"A work in which the really superfluous has been omitted, and that only which is necessary and useful in the ordinary routine in an attorney's office has been retained. He has performed his task in a masterly manner, and in doing so has given the why and the wherefore of the whole system of Solicitors' Bookkeeping. The volume is the most comprehensive we remember to have seen on the subject, and from the clear and intelligible manner in which the whole has been worked out it will render it unexceptionable in the hands of the student and the practitioner."—Law Magazine.

"So clear do the instructions appear, that a tyro of average skill and abilities, with application, could under ordinary circumstances open and keep the accounts of a business; and, so far as we can judge, the author has succeeded in his endeavour to divest Solicitors' Bookkeeping of complexity, and to be concise and simple, without being inefficient. We cannot dismiss this volume without briefly commenting upon the excellent style in which it is submitted to the profession."—Law Journal

"Mr. Coombs' book appears to us to have been carefully and usefully prepared, and the directions and illustrations given as to solicitors' bookkeeping in general are of such a nature that the work may be referred to with confidence on any point relating to Solicitors' Bookkeeping as a safe guide to the subject. This is not merely a valuable addition to the library of every solicitor, it is a book that every articled clerk, now that intermediate examinations embrace bookkeeping, will be read with profit and benefit to himself. It may be fairly said to exhaust the subject of which it treats, and the author has adopted a system having the great advantage of simplicity, while he employs as small a number of books as is consistent with a clear and accurate record of the business of each day for the purpose. We have little doubt that this work will gain a favourable place in the estimation of the profession and of law students, and will stand the test of the value of a book written professedly for practical men—the number of editions through which it will pass."—Solicitors' Journal.

"Mr. Coombs' Manual of Solicitors' Bookkeeping, in our opinion, takes the safe middle course, between too great intricacy of arrangement on one side, and want of detail and explanation on the other. His system can be equally followed in a small office, where a regular accountant is not employed, and in an office where the staff is large. Solicitors who manage property will find the specimens of rental accounts given in the Appendix very useful."—Irish Law Times.

"This is a work of considerable extent, prepared at the request of eminent solicitors, by an experienced law accountant."—Athenæum.

Lushington's Naval Prize Law.

Royal 8vo., 10s. 6d. cloth.

A MANUAL of NAVAL PRIZE LAW. By GODFREY LUSHINGTON, of the Inner Temple, Esq., Barrister at Law.

Lovesy's Law of Arbitration (Masters and Workmen).

12mo. 4s. cloth.

(Dedicated, by permission, to Lord St. Leonards.)

THE LAW of ARBITRATION between MASTERS and WORKMEN, as founded upon the Councils of Conciliation Act of 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 105), the Masters and Workmen Act (5 Geo. 4, c. 96), and other Acts, with an Introduction and Notes. By C. W. LOVESY, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"I think you have bestowed much attention upon the late statute and added some useful notes."—Lord St. Leonards.

Trower's Church Building Laws.

Post 8vo. 8*s.* cloth.

THE LAW of the BUILDING of CHURCHES, PARSONAGES, and SCHOOLS, and of the Division of Parishes and Places. By CHARLES FRANCIS TROWER, M.A., of the Inner Temple, Esq., Barrister at Law, late Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford, and late Secretary of Presentations to Lord Chancellor Westbury.

"We may pronounce it a useful work. It contains a great mass of information of essential import, and those who, as parishioners, legal advisers, or clergymen, are concerned with glebes, endowments, district chapelries, parishes, ecclesiastical commissions, and such like matters, about which the public, and notably the clerical public, seem to know but little, but which it is needless to say are matters of much importance."—Solicitors' Journal.

"His book is just the one we could wish every clergyman to possess, for if it was in the hands of our readers they would be saved the trouble of asking us very many questions."—Clerical Journal.

"In a well-arranged volume this gentleman points out concisely and intelligibly how the difficulties which usually beset parties in such matters may be avoided."—Oxford University Herald.

"On all the topics germane to its title this volume will be found a handy book of ecclesiastical law, and should on that account be made widely known among the clergy."—Church Mail.

"It is a compact and handy treatise, very clearly written, well arranged, easy of reference, and, besides a good table of contents, it has an elaborate index. It is a book we are glad to have and to recommend."—Literary Churchman.

Field's Law Relating to Curates, &c.

Post 8vo., 6*s.* cloth

The LAW RELATING to PROTESTANT CURATES and the RESIDENCE of INCUMBENTS or their BENEFICES in ENGLAND and IRELAND. By C. D. FIELD, M.A., LL.D., late Scholar of Trin. Coll. Dublin, and now of H. M.'s Bengal Civil Service; recently Judge of the Principal Court of Small Causes at Kishnaghur; and Registrar of H. M.'s High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal; Author of "The Law of Evidence in India," &c.

"A clear and concise exposition of a branch of the law not often brought under the notice of solicitors, but of considerable interest to the clergy."—Law Times.

"At all events curates now have no ground of complaint, because the treatise before us is a very intelligible and tolerably full exposition of the laws with which they are immediately concerned."—Law Journal.

"Dr. Field is accurate, so far as we can judge, and has completed his self-elected task satisfactorily. The vast number of statutes bearing upon the law of Curates renders a legal guide necessary, and also the many decisions on their interests. Dr. Field has done his work judiciously, and a copious index renders the results of his labours readily available to others."—St. James' Chronicle.

Petersdorff's Abridgment of the Common Law.—New Ed.

7 vols., with Supplement, Royal 8vo., complete to the year 1870, 8*l.* cloth.

A CONCISE, PRACTICAL ABRIDGMENT of the COMMON AND STATUTE LAW, as at present administered in the Common Law, Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Courts, excluding all that is obsolete, overruled or superseded: comprising a Series of Condensed Treatises on the different Branches of the Law, with detailed Directions, Forms and Precedents; an Alphabetical Dictionary of Technical Law Terms and Maxims, and a Collection of Words that have received a Special Judicial Construction; the whole illustrated by References to the principal Cases in Equity, and in the Scotch, American and Irish Reports, and the most eminent text writers. By CHARLES PETERSDORFF, Serjeant-at-Law, assisted by CHARLES W. WOOD, Esq., and WALKER MARSHALL, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.

Robson's Law and Practice in Bankruptcy.

8vo., 30*s.* cloth.

A COMPLETE TREATISE on the LAW of BANKRUPTCY, containing a full exposition of the Principles and Practice of the Bankrupt Law, including the alterations made by the Bankruptcy Act, 1869; with a copious Index, and an Appendix containing the Bankruptcy Acts, and the General Rules and Orders. By GEORGE YOUNG ROBSON, of the Inner Temple, Esq., Barrister at Law.

"The work before us is a very elaborate treatise, and calls for warm commendation. We congratulate Mr. Robson in succeeding in a work which demands talent, tact and industry. Indeed, the work is a model of handiness and lucidity. The author has left nothing undone to render his work complete. It is not often that we can accord so much praise to a book; but we are sure that no one who consults Mr. Robson's work will say that our commendation is undeserved."—Law Journal.

"This work is, as its title asserts, a Treatise on the Law of Bankruptcy. Instead of following the orthodox plan of giving us the sections of the act with notes in microscopic type, in which are collected with an infinite expenditure of labour extracts from every case bearing directly or remotely on the subject, we have here a distinct attempt to discover the principles in accordance with which the law has been built. This method has peculiar advantages to recommend it to the practitioner. It gives him a grasp of his subject with which no mere summary of cases and text will supply him. But it is to the student to whom a book, dealing with the subject in this form, is peculiarly valuable. We have great pleasure in giving it the warmest recommendation to our readers."—Law Magazine.

Sir T. E. May's Parliamentary Practice.—Sixth Edition.

One very thick volume, 8vo., 35*s.* cloth.

A TREATISE on the LAW, PRIVILEGES, PROCEEDINGS and USAGE of PARLIAMENT. By Sir THOMAS ERSKINE MAY, K.C.B., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law; Clerk of the House of Commons. Sixth Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

CONTENTS:—Book I. Constitution, Powers and Privileges of Parliament.—Book II. Practice and Proceedings in Parliament.—Book III. The Manner of Passing Private Bills, with the Standing Orders in both Houses, and the most recent Precedents.

"Sir T. Erskine May deserves the best thanks of all who are interested in parliamentary proceedings, for the care and attention he has bestowed in preparing this edition of his valuable work."—Law Magazine.

"We hail with satisfaction a new edition of this admirable work. The politician, the lawyer, the parliamentary agent and the educated gentleman, will find here a teacher, a guide, a digest of practice and a pleasing companion. To legal readers, the first portion of this work is of the most value. We may advert to the great care with which the author has noted up and incorporated in this new edition all the changes and events of importance since the publication of the fifth edition."—Law Journal.

"Six editions in twenty-four years attest the estimation in which this great work is held by the members of successive Parliaments, by the promoters of private bills, and by constitutional lawyers It is an exhaustive treatise on that most lawless of all law the Law of Parliament."—Law Times.

"Perhaps no work has achieved a greater reputation among lawyers than May's Parliamentary Practice. Since the first publication in 1844, a succession of editions have been called for, and now, after an interval of four years since the issue of the fifth, a sixth edition has been found necessary. The work is too well-known to need the repetition of any description of its scope."—Solicitors' Journal.

"His well-known treatise on the 'Law and Usage of Parliament' at once placed him upon a level with Hatsell, and is now the recognized text-book, not in England only, but in her colonies, and wherever parliamentary government is attempted. It may almost be said to be better known at Australia than at Westminster, as the practice of colonial legislatures is less settled than our own, and our countrymen at the Antipodes are more combative than ourselves upon points of order and procedure. In Germany it has been translated for the use of the Prussian and North German Parliaments, and we have found it in a bookseller's shop at Pesth, in the Hungarian language, under the name of 'May Erskine Tamás.'"—Times.

12mo., 6*s.* cloth.

A CONCISE TREATISE on the PRINCIPLES of EQUITY PLEADING; with Precedents. By C. STEWART DREWRY, of the Inner Temple, Esq., Barrister at Law.

"It will be found of great utility as introductory to the more elaborate treatises, or to refresh the memory after the study of the larger books."—Law Times.

Glen's Law of Highways.—Second Edition.

Post 8vo., 20s. cloth.

The LAW of HIGHWAYS: comprising the Highway Acts 1835, 1862 and 1864; the South Wales Highway Act; the Statutes and Decisions of the Courts on the subject of Highways, Bridges, Ferries, &c., including the Duties of Highway Boards, Surveyors of Highways, the Law of Highways in Local Board of Health Districts; Highways affected by Railways, and Locomotives on Highways. With an Appendix of Statutes in force relating to Highways. By W. CUNNINGHAM GLEN, Esq., Barrister at Law. Second Edition.

"Altogether we may confidently venture to confirm the statement in the preface that it may now fairly claim to be recognised as a standard authority on the law of highways by those who are engaged officially or otherwise in the administration of that branch of the law. It is so as we from personal knowledge can affirm, and, we may add, that it is received by them as a trustworthy guide in the discharge of their onerous duties."—Law Times.

"The present edition of Mr. Glen's work contains a great deal of valuable matter which is entirely new. To those interested in the law of highways this manual as it now appears will be found a safe and efficient guide."—Law Magazine.

"Mr. Glen has an established reputation in the legal profession as a careful and laborious writer, and this new edition of his new work on highway law will convince those who refer to it that he has neglected no topic likely to be useful to those whose duties require them to have a knowledge of this particular branch of the law. This work aspires above others which profess merely to be annotated reprints of acts of parliament. It will be found to contain much information which might be looked for elsewhere in vain. The general law upon the subject is set forth with a care and lucidity deserving of great praise, and a good index facilitates reference, and renders this work the most complete on this important subject which has yet been published."—Justice of the Peace.

"Mr. Glen may well say that on entire revision of the first edition was necessitated by the recent statutes, and his second edition is a bulky volume of 800 pages. His work may be read with satisfaction by the general student as well as referred to with confidence by the practitioner. We need say nothing further of this second edition than that we think it likely to maintain fully the reputation obtained by its predecessor. It has the advantages, by no means unworthy of consideration, of being well printed and well indexed, as well as well arranged, and a copious index of statutes renders it a perfect compendium of the authorities bearing in any way on the law of highways."—Solicitors' Journal.

Fry's Specific Performance of Contracts.

8vo., 16s. cloth.

A TREATISE on the SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE of CONTRACTS, including those of Public Companies, with a Preliminary Chapter on the Provisions of the Chancery Amendment Act, 1858. By EDWARD FRY, B.A., of Lincoln's Inn, Esq., Barrister at Law.

"It will be seen what a masterly grasp the author has taken of his subject, and his treatment of the various parts of it equally exhibits the hand of a man who has studied the law as a science. He is skilful in the extraction of principles, precise in the exposition of them, apt in their application to the particular case, but in all he is thoroughly practical. The practitioner who uses it as a text book will find in it an adviser who will tell him not only what the law is, but how it may be enforced."—Law Times.

"Mr. Fry's work presents in a reasonable compass a large quantity of modern learning on the subject of contracts, with reference to the common remedy by specific performance, and will thus be acceptable to the profession generally."—Law Chronicle.

"There is a closeness and clearness in its style, and a latent fulness in the exposition, which not only argue a knowledge of the law, but of those varying circumstances in human society to which the law has to be applied."—Spectator.

"Mr. Fry's elaborate essay appears to exhaust the subject, on which he has cited and brought to bear, with great diligence, some 1,500 cases, which include those of the latest reports."—Law Magazine and Review.

"Although a professional work, it is sufficiently popular in style to be serviceable to all persons engaged in commercial or joint-stock undertakings."—The Times.

"The law of specific performance is a growing law just now, and the characteristic which gives its special value to Mr. Fry's work is, that the recent cases are as well digested in his mind as the older ones. Mr. Fry's is one of the best specimens of the modern law book."—The Economist.

Phillips's Law of Lunacy.

Post 8vo., 18s. cloth.

THE LAW CONCERNING LUNATICS, IDIOTS and PERSONS of UNSOUND MIND. By CHARLES PALMER PHILLIPS, M.A., of Lincoln's Inn, Esq., Barrister at Law, and Secretary to the Commissioners of Lunacy.

"Mr. C. P. Phillips has in his very complete, elaborate and useful volume presented us with an excellent view of the present law as well as the practice relating to lunacy."—Law Magazine and Review.

"The work is one on which the author has evidently bestowed great pains, and which not only bears the mark of great application and research, but which shows a familiarity with the subject."—Justice of the Peace.
